Would wear the title with a better grace;

If I became it not, yet it would be Part of your duty then to flatter me. Dryden.

2. Applied to things, to be suitable to the person; to befit; to be congruous to the appearance, or character, or circumstances, in such a manner as to add grace; to be graceful.

She to her fire made humble reverence,

And bowed low, that her right well became,

And added grace unto her excellence. Fairy Queen.

I would I had some flowers of the spring that might

Become your time of day; and your's, and your's,

That wear upon your virgin branches yet

Your maidenheads growing. Shakspeare.

Yet be sad, good brothers;

For, to speak truth, it very well becomes you. Shak.

Your dishonour

Mangles true judgment, and bereaves the state

Of that integrity which should become it. Shakspeare.

Wyckherly was of my opinion, or rather I of his: for it becomes me to speak of so excellent a poet. Dryden.

He utterly rejected their fables concerning their gods, as not becoming good men, much less those which were worshipped for gods. Stillington.

becoming. partic. adj. [from become.] That which pleases by an elegant propriety; graceful.

It is sometimes used with the particle of; but ge-and imposed upon him, by making him believe a lie, he may truly say, that is the man who would have ruined me. South.

2. To deceive; to evade.

Is wretchedness depriv'd that benefit,
To end itself by death? 'Tis yet some comfort,
When misery could beguile the tyrant's rage,
And frustrate his proud will. Shakespeare.

3. To deceive pleasingly; to amuse.

Sweet, leave me here awhile;
My spirits grow dull, and fain I would beguile
The tedious day with sleep. Shakespeare.
With these sometimes the doth her time beguile;
These do by fits her phantasy possess.

Sir J. Davies.

BEGUN. The participle passive of begin.
But thou bright morning star, thou rising sun,
Which in these latter times hast brought to light
Those mysteries, that, since the world began
Lay hid in darkness and eternal night.

Sir J. Davies.

BEHALF. n. f. [This word Skinner derives from half, and interprets it, for my half; as, for my part.
It seems to me rather corrupted from behoof, profit; the pronunciation degenerating easily to behoof; which, in imitation of other words so founded,
was written, by those who knew not the etymology, behalff.]

1. Favour; cause favoured; we say in behalf, but for the sake.

He was in confidence with those who designed the destruction of Strafford; against whom he had contracted some prejudice in the behalf of his nation. Clarendon.

Were but my heart as naked to thy view,
Marcus would see it bleed in his behalf. Addison.

Never was any nation blessed with more frequent interpositions of divine providence in its behalf. Atterbury.

2. Vindication; support.

He might, in his preference, defy all Arcadian knights, in the behalf of his mistress's beauty. Sid.

Or in behalf of man, or to invade Vacant possession, some new trouble raise. Milt.

Others believe, that by the two Fortunes, were meant prosperity or affliction; and produce, in their behalf, an ancient monument. Addis. on Italy.

To BEHAVE. v. a. [from be and have.]
1. To carry; to conduct: used almost always with the reciprocal pronoun.

We behaved not ourselves disorderly among you.

Thessalonians.

Manifest signs came from heaven, unto those that behaved themselves manfully. 2 Maccabees.

To their wills wedded, to their errors slaves,
No man, like them, they think, himself behaves.

Denham.

We so live, and so act, as if we were secure of the final issue and event of things, however we may behave ourselves. Atterbury.

2. It seems formerly to have had the sense of,
to govern; to subdue; to discipline: but this is not now used.

But who his limbs with labours, and his mind behaves with cares, cannot so easy miss. Fairy Q.

With such sober and unnoted passion,
He did behave his anger ere 'twas spent,
As if he had but prov'd an argument. Shakspeare.

BEH

To BEHAVE. v. n. To act; to conduct one's self.
It is taken either in a good or a bad sense; as, he behaved well or ill.

BEHAVIOUR. n. f. [from behave.]

1. Manner of behaving one's self, whether good or bad; manners; carriage with respect to propriety.

Mopla, curious in any thing but her own good behaviour, followed Zeimane. Sidney.

2. External appearance, with respect to grace.
He marked in Dora's dancing, good grace and handsome behaviour. Sidney.

3. Gesture; manner of action, adapted to particular occasions.

Well witnessing the most submissive behaviour, that a thrall'd heart could express. Sidney.

When we make profession of our faith, we stand; when we acknowledge our sins, or seek unto God for favour, we fall down; because the gesture of constancy becometh us best in the one, in the other the behaviour of humility. Hooker.

One man sees how much another man is a fool,
when he dedicates his behaviour to love.

Shakespeare.

And he changed his behaviour before them, and feigned himself mad in their hands. Samuel.

4. Elegance of manners; gracefulness.

The beautiful prove accomplished, but not of great spirit; and study, for the most part, rather behaviour than virtue. Bacon.

He who adviseth the philosopher, altogether devoted to the Muses, sometimes to offer sacrifice to the altars of the Graces, thought knowledge imperfect without behaviour. Wotton.

5. Conduct; general practice; course of life.

To him, who hath a prospect of the state that attends men after this life, depending on their behaviour here, the measures of good and evil are changed. Locke.

6. To be upon one's behaviour. A familiar phrase, noting such a state as requires great caution; a state in which a failure in behaviour will have bad consequences.

Tyrants themselves are upon their behaviour to a superior power. L'Estrange.

To BEHEAD. v. a. [from be and head.] To deprive of the head; to kill by cutting off the head.

His beheading he underwent with all christian

of Queen Elizabeth. Addison.

BEHELD. participle passive, from behold; which see.

All hail! ye virgin daughters of the main!
Ye streams, beyond my hopes beheld again! Pope.

BEHEMOTH. n. f. Behemoth, in Hebrew, signifies beasts in general, particularly the larger kind, fit for service. But Job speaks of an animal behemoth, and describes its properties. Bochart has taken much care to make it the hippopotamus, or river horse. Sanctius thinks it is an ox. The Fathers suppose the devil to be meant by it. But we agree with the generality of interpreters, that it is the elephant. Cabinet.

Behold now behemoth, which I made with thee;
he eateth grass as an ox. Job.

Behold! in plaited mail

Behemoth rears his head. Thomson.

BEHEN. } n. f. Valerian roots. Also a fruit re-BEN. } sembling the tamarisk, from which perfumers extract an oil. Diet.

BEHE'ST. n. f. [from be and best; hæp, Sax.]
Command; precept; mandate.

Her tender youth had obediently lived under her parents behests, without framing, out of her own will the forechoosing of any thing. Sidney.

Such joy he had their stubborn hearts to quell,
And sturdy courage tame with dreadful awe,
That his behest they fear'd as a proud tyrant's law. Spenser.

I, messenger, from everlasting Jove,
In his great name thus his behest do tell. Fairfax.

To

BEH

To visit oft those happy tribes,
On high bebefts his angels to and fro Pals'd frequent. Milton.

In heav'n God ever blest, and his divine Bebefts obey, worthiest to be obey'd! Milton.
To BEH'GHT. v. a. pret. bebgt, part. bebght.
[from hatan, to promise, Saxon.]

present, but they leave peace and contentment behind them. Tillotson.

6. Remaining after the death of those to whom it belonged.

What he gave me to publish, was but a small part of what he left behind him. Pope.

7. At a distance from something going before.
Such is the swiftness of your mind.
That, like the earth's, it leaves our sense behind.
Dryden.

8. Inferiour to another, having the posteriour place with regard to excellence.

After the overthrow of this first house of God, a second was erected; but with so great odds, that they wept, which beheld how much this latter came behind it. Hooker.

9. On the other side of something.
From light retir'd, behind his daughter's bed,
He, for approaching sleep, compos'd his head.
Dryden.

BEH'ND. adv.
1. Out of sight; not yet produced to view; remaining.

BEH'NHAND. adv. [from behind and hand.]

1. In a state in which rent or profit, or any advantage, is anticipated, so that less is to be received, or more performed, than the natural or just proportion.

Your trade would suffer, if your being behindhand has made the natural use so high, that your tradesman cannot live upon his labour. Locke.

2. Not upon equal terms, with regard to forwardness. In this sense, it is followed by with.

Consider, whether it is not better to be half a year behindhand with the fashionable part of the world, than to strain beyond his circumstances.

Spectator.
3. Shakespeare uses it as an adjective, but licentiously, for backward; tardy.

And these thy offices,
So rarely kind, are as interpreters
Of my behindhand slackness. Shakespeare.

To BEH'OLD. v. a. pret. I beheld, I have beheld, or beholden. [behealdan, Saxon.] To view;

BEH

to see; to look upon; to behold is to see, in an em-phatical or intensive sense.

Son of man, behold with thine eyes, and hear with thine ears. Ezekiel.

When Theffalians on horseback were bebeld afar off, while their horses watered, while their heads were depressed, they were conceived by the spectators to be one animal. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Man looks aloft, and, with erected eyes,
Beholds his own hereditary skies. Dryden.

At this the former tale again he told,
With thund'ring tone, and dreadful to behold. Dry.

The Saviour comes by ancient bards foretold,
Hear him ye deaf, and all ye blind behold. Pope.

BEH'LD. interj. [from the verb.] See; lo:
a word by which attention is excited, or admiration noted.

Behold! I am with thee, and will keep thee.
Genesis.

When out of hope, behold her! not far off,
Such as I saw her in my dream adorn'd
With what all earth or heaven could bestow,
To make her amiable. Milton.

BEH'LDEN. partic. adj. [gebouden, Dutch;
that is, held in obligation. It is very corruptly written beholding.] Obliged; bound in gratitude; with the particle to.

Horns, which such as you are fain to be beholden to your wives for. Shakespeare.

Little are we beholden to your love,
And little looked for at your helping hands. Shakesf.

I found you next; in respect of bond both of near alliance, and particularly of communication in studies: wherein I must acknowledge myself beholden to you. Bacon.

I think myself mightily beholden to you for the reprehension you then gave us. Addison.

We, who see men under the awe of justice, cannot conceive, what savage creatures they would be without it; and how much beholden we are to that wife contrivance. Atterbury.

BEH'OLDER. n. f. [from behold.] Spectator; he that looks upon any thing.

Was this the face,
That, like the sun, did make beholders wink?
Shakespeare.

These beasts among Beholders rude, and shallow to discern Half what in thee is fair, one man except,
Who sees thee? Milton.

Things of wonder give no less delight
To the wife Maker's, than beholder's sight. Donham.

The jutting chiefs in rude encounters join,
Each fair beholder trembling for her knight. Gran.

The charitable foundations in the church of Rome, exceed all the demands of charity, and raise envy, rather than compassion, in the breasts of beholders. Atterbury.

BEH'OLDING. adj. [corrupted from beholden.]
Obliged. See BEHOLDEN.

BEH'OLDING. n. f. Obligation.
Love to virtue, and not to any particular be-holdings, hath expressed this my testimony. Carew.

BEH'OLDINGNESS. n. f. [from beholding, mistaken for beholden.] The state of being obliged.

The king invited us to his court, so as I must acknowledge, a beholdingness unto him. Sidney.

In this my debt I seem'd loth to confess,
In that I shunn'd beholdingness. Donne.

BEH'OF. n. f. [from beboove.] That which behoves; that which is advantageous; profit; advantage.

Her majesty may alter any thing of those laws, for her own beboof, and for the good of the people. Spenser.

No mean recompence it brings.
To your beboof: if I that region lost,
All usurpation thence expell'd, reduce
To her original darkness, and your sway. Milton.

Wer't thou some star, which, from the ruin'd roof
Of staid Olympus, by mischance did'ft fall;
Which careful Jove, in nature's true beboof,
Took up, and in fit place did reinstate. Milton.

Because it was for the beboof of the animal,
that, upon any sudden accident, it might be awakened, there were no shuts or stopples made for the ears. Ray.

BEI

It would be of no beboof, for the settling of government, unless there were a way taught, how to know the person to whom belonged this power of dominion. Locke.

To BEHO'OVE. v. n. [behogan, Saxon; it is a duty.] To be fit; to be meet; either with respect to duty, necessity, or convenience. It is used only impersonally with it.

For better examination of their quality, it bebooveth the very foundation and root, the highest well spring and fountain of them, to be discovered. Hooker.

He did so prudently temper his passions, as that none of them made him wanting in the offices of life, which it bebooveth, or became him to perform. Atterbury.

But should you lure the monarch of the brook,
Behoves you then to ply your finest art. Thomson.

BEHO'OVERFUL. adj. [from beboof.] Useful; profitable; advantageous. This word is somewhat antiquated.

It is very bebooveful in this country of Ireland, where there are waste deserts full of grass, that the same should be eaten down. Spenser.

Laws are many times full of imperfections;
and that which is supposed bebooveful unto men, proveth oftentimes most pernicious. Hooker.

Madam, we have culled such necessities
As are bebooveful for our state to-morrow. Shakesf.

It may be most bebooveful for princes in matters of grace, to transact the same publicly: so it is as requisite, in matters of judgment, punishment, and censure, that the same be transacted privately. Clarendon.

BEHO'OVERFULLY. adv. [from bebooveful.] Profitably; usefully.

Tell us of more weighty dislikes than these,
and that may more beboovefully import the reformation. Spenser.

BEHO'T. [preterite, as it seems, of be beight, to promise.]

With sharp intended sting so rude him smote,
That to the earth him drove as stricken dead,
Ne living wight would have him life bebot. F. Q.

BE'ING. partic. [from be.]
Those, who have their hope in another life, look upon themselves as being on their passage through this. Atterbury.

BE'ING. n. f. [from be.]
1. Existence; opposed to nonentity.

Of him all things have both received their first being, and their continuance to be that which they are. Hooker.

Yet is not God the author of her ill,
Though author of her being, and being there. Davies.

There is none but he,
Whose being I do fear: and under him
My genius is rebuked. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Thee, Father, first they sung, omnipotent,
Immutable, immortal, infinite,
Eternal king! Thee, Author of all being,
Fountain of light! Milton's Paradise Lost.

Merciful and gracious, thou gavest us being, raising us from nothing to be an excellent creation. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

Consider every thing as not yet in being: then examine, if it must needs have been at all, or what other ways it might have been. Bentley.

2. A particular state or condition.
Those happy spirits, which ordain'd by fate
For future being, and new bodies wait. Dryden.

Heav'n from all creatures hides the book of fate;
From brutes what men, from men what spirits
know:
Or who could suffer being here below? Pope.

As now your own, our being were of old,
And once inclos'd in woman's beauteous mould.
Pope.

3. The person existing.
Ah, fair, yet false; ah, being form'd to cheat,
By seeming kindness, mixt with deep deceit. Dryden.

BEL

It is folly to seek the approbation of any being, besides the supreme; because no other being can make a right judgment of us, and because we can procure no considerable advantage from the approbation of any other being. Addison. Spectator.
BEL'ING. conjunct. [from be.] Since. Diff.
BE IT SO. A phrase of anticipation, suppose it be so; or of permission, let it be so.

My gracious duke,
Be't so she will not here, before your grace,
 Consent to marry with Demetrius;
 I beg the ancient privilege of Athens. Shakesp.
TO BELA'BOUR. v. a. [from be and labour.] To beat: to thump: a word in low speech.
 What several madneffes in men appear,
 Orestes runs from fancy'd furies here;
 Ajax belabours there an harmless ox,
 And thinks that Agamemnon feels the knocks. Dryden.

He sees virago Nell belabour,
 With his own staff, his peaceful neighbour. Swift.

BEL'AMIE. n. f. [bel ami, Fr.] A friend; an intimate. This word is out of use.

Wife Socrates
 Pour'd out his life, and last philosophy,
 To the fair Critias, his dearest belamie. Fairy Queen.
BEL'AMOUR. n. f. [bel amour, Fr.] Gallant; comfort; paramour; obfolete.

Lo, lo, how brave she decks her bounteous bow'r,
 With filken curtains, and gold coverlets,
 Therein to throud her sumptuous belamour. Fairy Queen.

BELA'TED. adj. [from be and late.] Benighted; out of doors late at night.

Fairy elves,
 Whose midnight revels, by a forest side,
 Or fountain, some belated peasant fees,
 Or dreams he fees. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Or near Fleetditch's oozy brinks Belated, seems on watch to lie. Swift.

TO BELA'V. v. a. [from be and lay; as, to way-lay, to lie in wait, to lay wait for.]

1. To block up; to stop the passage.
 The speedy horse all passages belav,
 And spur their smoking steeds to cross their way. Dryden.

2. To place in ambush.
 'Gainst such strong castles needeth greater night,
 Than those small forces ye were wont belav. Spenser.

TO BELAY a rope. [Sea term.] To fasten; as to belay a rope.

TO BELCH. v. n. [bealcan, Saxon.]
 1. To eject the wind from the stomach; to eruct.

The waters boil, and belching from below,
 Black sands as from a forceful engine throw. Dryden.

The symptoms are, a four smell in their faces, belchings, and distensions of the bowels. Arbutnot on Allments.

2. To issue out, as by eructation.

A triple pile of plumes his crest adorn'd,
 On which with belching flames Chimæra burn'd. Dryden.

TO BELCH. v. a. To throw out from the stomach; to eject from any hollow place. It is a word implying coarseness; latefulness; or horror.

They are all but stomachs, and we all but food;

They eat us hungerly, and, when they're full,
 They belch us. Shakesp.

The bitterness of it I now belch from my heart. Shakesp.

Immediate in a flame,
 But soon obscur'd with smoke, all heav'n appear'd,
 From those deep-throated engines belch'd. Milton.

The gates that now
 Stood open wide, belching outrageous flame Far into chaos, since the fiend pass'd through. Milton.

BEL

Rough as their savage lords who rang'd the wood,
 And, fat with acorns, belch'd their windy food. Dryden.

There belch the mingl'd streams of wind and blood,
 And human flesh, his indigested food. Pope's Ody.

When I an am'rous kifs design'd,
 I belch'd an hurricane of wind. Swift.

BELCH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of eructation.

2. A cant term for malt liquor.

A sudden reformation would follow, among all forts of people; porters would no longer be drunk with belch. Dennis.

BEL'DAM. n. f. [belle dame, which, in old French, signified probably an old woman, as belle age, old age.]

1. An old woman; generally a term of contempt, marking the last degree of old age, with all its faults and miseries.

Then sing of secret things that came to pass,
 When beldam Nature in her cradle was. Milton.

2. A hag.

Why, how now, Hecate, you look angrily?—
 Have I not reason, beldam, as you are?

Saucy and overbold? Shakesp.

The resty sieve wagg'd ne'er the more;
 I weep for woe, the resty beldam swore. Dryden.

TO BELE'AGUER. v. a. [belagueren, Dutch.]

To besiege; to block up a place; to lie before a town.

Their business, which they carry on, is the general concernment of the Trojan camp, then belaguer'd by Turnus and the Latins. Dryden's Du.

Against belaguer'd heav'n the giants move:
 Hills pil'd on hills, on mountains mountains lie,
 To make their mad approaches to the sky. Dry.

BEL'AGUERER. n. f. [from belaguer.] One that besieges a place.

TO BELLE. v. a. [a term in navigation.] To place in a direction unsuitable to the wind.

BELMINTES. n. f. [from bellus, a dart or arrow, because of its resemblance to the point of an arrow.] Arrowhead, or finger-stone, of a whitish and sometimes a gold colour.

BELFLO'WER. n. f. [from belle and flower, because of the shape of its flower; in Latin campanula.] A plant.

There is a vast number of the species of this plant. The tallest pyramidal belflower.

Those that make recorders know this, and likewise belfanders in fitting the tune of their bells. Bacon.

BEL'ERY. n. f. [Biffroy, in French, is a tower; which was perhaps the true word, till those, who knew not its original, corrupted it to belfry, because bells were in it.] The place where bells are rung.

Fetch the leathern bucket that hangs in the belfry; that is curiously painted before, and will make a figure. Gay.

BEL'ERD. n. f. [bell' regard, Fr.] A soft glance; a kind regard: an old word, now wholly disused.

Upon her eyelids many graces sat,
 Under the shadow of her even brows,
 Working belgards, and amorous retreats. Fairy Q.

TO BELIE. v. a. [from be and lie.]

1. To counterfeit; to feign; to mimic.

Which durst, with horses' hoofs that beat the ground,
 And martial brags, beli; the thunder's found. Dry.

The shape of man, and imitated beast
 The walk, the words, the gesture could supply,
 The habit mimic, and the mean beli. Dryden.

2. To give the lie to; to charge with falsehood.

BEL

Sure there is none but fears a future state;
 And when the most obdurate swear they do not,
 Their trembling hearts beli their boastful tongues. Dryden.

Paint, patches, jewels laid aside,
 At night astronomers agree,
 The evening has the day bely'd,
 And Phillis is some forty-three. Prior.

To calumniate; to raise false reports of any man.

Thou dost beli him, Piercy, thou *beli*st him:
 He never did encounter with Glendower. Shakesp.

4. To give a false representation of any thing.

Uncle, for heav'n's sake, comfortable words,—
 Should I do so, I should beli my thoughts. Shakesp.

Tuscan Valerius by force o'ercame,
 And not bely'd his mighty father's name. Dryden's Æn.

In the dispute what'er I said,
 My heart was by my tongue bely'd;
 And in my looks you might have read,
 How much I argu'd on your side. Prior.

5. To fill with lies. This seems to be its meaning here.

'Tis slander, whose breath
 Rides on the posting winds, and doth beli
 All corners of the world. Shakesp.

BELIEF. n. f. [from believe.]

1. Credit given to something, which we know not of ourselves, on account of the authority by which it is delivered.

Those comforts that shall never cease,
 Future in hope, but present in belief. Watson.

Faith is a firm belief of the whole word of God, of his gospel, commands, threats, and promises. Watts.

2. The theological virtue of faith, or firm confidence of the truths of religion.

No man can attain belief by the bare contemplation of heaven and earth; for that they neither are sufficient to give us as much as the least spark of light concerning the very principal mysteries of our faith. Hooker.

3. Religion; the body of tenets held by the professors of faith.

In the heat of general persecution, whereunto christian belief was subject upon the first promulgation, it much confirmed the weaker minds, when relation was made how God had been glorified through the sufferings of martyrs. Hooker.

4. Persuasion; opinion.

He can, I know, but doubt to think he will:
 Yet hope would fain subscribe, and tempts belief. Milton.

All treaties are grounded upon the belief, that states will be found in their honour and observance of treaties. Temple.

5. The thing believed; the object of belief.

Superstitious prophecies are not only the belief of fools, but the talk sometimes of wise men. Bacon.

6. Creed; a form containing the articles of faith.

BELIEVABLE. adj. [from believe.] Credible; that which may be credited or believed.

TO BELIEVE. v. a. [gelyfan, Saxon.]

1. To credit upon the authority of another, or from some other reason than our personal knowledge.

Adherence to a proposition, which they are persuaded, but do not know to be true, is not seeing, but believing. Locke.

Ten thousand things there are, which we believe merely upon the authority or credit of those who have spoken or written of them. Watts's Log.

2. To put confidence in the veracity of any one.

The people may hear when I speak with thee, and believe thee for ever. Exodus.

TO BELIEVE. v. n.

1. To have a firm persuasion of any thing.

They may believe that the Lord God of their fathers, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, hath appeared unto thee. Genesis.

2. To exercise the theological virtue of faith.

Now

Now God be prais'd, that, to believing souls, Gives light in darkness, comfort in despair. Shak.
For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation. Romans.

3. With the particle in; to hold as an object of faith.

Believe in the Lord your God, so shall you be established. 2 Chron.

4. With the particle upon; to trust; to place full confidence in; to rest upon with faith.

To them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name. John.

5. I believe, is sometimes used as a way slightly noting some want of certainty or exactness.

Though they are, I believe, as high as most steeples in England, yet a person, in his drink, fell down, without any other hurt than the breaking of an arm. Addison on Italy.

BELIEVER. n. f. [from believe.]
1. He that believes, or gives credit.

Discipline began to enter into conflict with churches, which, in extremity, had been believers of it. Hooker.

2. A professor of Christianity.

Infidels themselves did discern in matters of life, when believers did well, when otherwise. Hooker.

If he which writeth, do that which is forcible,
how should he which readeth, be thought to do that, which, in itself, is of no force to work belief, and to save believers? Hooker.

Mysteries held by us have no power, pomp, or wealth, but have been maintained by the universal body of true believers, from the days of the apostles, and will be to the resurrection; neither will the gates of hell prevail against them. Swift.

BELIEVINGLY. adv. [from believe.] After a believing manner.

BELIKE. adv. [from like, as by likelihood.]
1. Probably; likely; perhaps.

There came out of the same woods a horrible foul bear, which fearing, belike, while the lion was present, came furiously towards the place where I was. Sidney.

Lord Angelo, belike, thinking me reminds in my office, awakens me with this unwonted putting on. Shakespeare.

Josephus affirmeth, that one of them remained in his time; meaning, belike, some ruin or foundation thereof. Raleigh.

2. It is sometimes used in a sense of irony; as,
It may be supposed.

We think, belike, that he will accept what the meaneft of them would disdain. Hooker.

God appointed the sea to one of them, and the land to the other, because they were so great, that the sea could not hold them both; for else, belike, if the sea had been large enough, we might have gone a fishing for elephants. Brewer's Languages.

BELIVE. adv. [belive, Sax. probably from bi and live, in the sense of vivacity; speed; quickness.] Speedily; quickly: a word out of use.

By that same way the direful dames to drive
Their mournful chariot, fill'd with rusty blood,
And down to Pluto's house are come belive. Fairy Queen.

BELL. n. f. [bel, Saxon; supposed by Skinner to come from pelvis, Lat. a basin. See BALL.]

1. A vessel, or hollow body of cast metal, formed to make a noise by the act of a clapper, hammer, or some other instrument striking against it.
Bells are in the towers of churches, to call the congregation together.

Your flock assembled by the bell,
Encircled you to hear with reverence. Shakespeare.

Get thee gone, and dig my grave thyself,
And bid the merry bells ring to thy ear,
That thou art crowned, not that I am dead. Shakespeare.

Four bells admit twenty four changes in ringing, and five bells one hundred and twenty.

He has no one necessary attention to any thing, but the bell, which calls to prayers twice a day. Addison. Spectator.

2. It is used for any thing in the form of a bell, as the cups of flowers.

Where the bee sucks, there suck I,
In a cowslip's bell I lie. Shakespeare. Tempest.

The humming bees that hunt the golden dew,
In summer's heat on tops of lilies feed,
And creep within their bells to suck the balmy feed. Dryden.

3. A small hollow globe of metal perforated, and containing in it a solid ball; which, when it is shaken, by bounding against the sides, gives a sound.

As the ox hath his yoke, the horse his curb, and the falcon his bells, so hath man his desires. Shakespeare. As you like it.

4. To bear the bell. To be the first; from the whether, that carries a bell among the sheep, or the first horse of a drove that has bells on his collar.

The Italians have bore away the bell from all other nations, as may appear both by their books and works. Hakewill.

5. To shake the bells. A phrase, in Shakespeare, taken from the bells of a hawk.

Neither the king, nor he that loves him best,
The proudest he that holds up Lancaster, Dares stir a wing, if Warwick shakes his bells. Shakespeare.

To BELL. v. n. [from the noun.] To grow in buds or flowers, in the form of a bell.

Hops, in the beginning of August, bell, and are sometimes ripe. Mortimer.

BELL-FASHIONED. adj. [from bell and fashion.]
Having the form of a bell; campaniform.

The thorn apple rises with a strong round stalk, having large bell-fashion'd flowers at the joints. Mortimer.

BELLE. n. f. [beau, belle, Fr.] A young lady.

What motive could compel
A well-bred lord to assault a gentle belle?
O say, what stranger cause yet unexplor'd,
Could make a gentle belle reject a lord? Pope.

BELLES LETTRES. n. f. [Fr.] Polite literature. It has no singular.

The exactness of the other is to admit of something like discourse, especially in what regards the belles lettres. Tatler.

BELLIBONE. n. f. [from bella, beautiful, and bona, good, Lat. belle & bona, Fr.] A woman excelling both in beauty and goodness. A word now out of use.

Pan may be proud, that ever he begot
Such a bellion,
And Syrinx rejoice, that ever was her lot
To bear such a one. Spenser.

BELLIGERANT. adj. [belliger, Lat.] Wag-BELLIGEROUS. ing war. Dict.

BELLING. n. f. A hunting term, spoke of a roe, when she makes a noise in rutting time. Dict.

BELLIPOTENT. adj. [bellipotens, Lat.] Puiffant; mighty in war. Dict.

To BELLLOW. v. n. [bellan, Saxon.]
1. To make a noise as a bull.

Jupiter became a bull, and bellow'd; the green
Neptune a ram, and bleated. Shakespeare.

What bull dares bellow, or what sheep dares bleat
Within the lion's den? Dryden.

But now, the husband of a herd must be Thy mate, and bellowing sons thy progeny. Dryden.

2. To make any violent outcry.

He fasten'd on my neck, and bellow'd out,
As he'd burst heav'n. Shakespeare.

3. To vociferate; to clamour. In this sense it is a word of contempt.

The dull fat captain, with a hound's deep throat,
Would bellow out a laugh in a base note. Dryden.

This gentleman is accustomed to roar and bellow
so terribly loud, that he frightens us. Tatler.

4. To roar as the sea in a storm; or as the wind; to make any continued noise, that may cause terror.

Till, at the last, he heard a dread sound,
Which through the wood loud bellowing did rebound. Spenser.

The rising rivers float the nether ground;
And rocks the bellowing voice of boiling seas rebound. Dryden.

BELLOWS. n. f. [blug, Sax. perhaps it is corrupted from bellies, the wind being contained in the hollow, or belly. It has no singular; for we usually say, a pair of bellows; but Dryden has used bellows as a singular.]

1. The instrument used to blow the fire.

Since sighs into my inward furnace turned,
For bellows serve to kindle more the fire. Sidney.

One, with great bellows, gather'd filling air,
And, with forc'd wind, the fuel did inflame. F. & S.

The Smith prepares his hammer for the stroke,
While the lung'd bellows hissing fire provoke. Dryden.

The lungs, as bellows, supply a force of breath; and the aspera arteria is as the nose of bellows, to collect and convey the breath. Holder.

2. In the following passage it is singular.

Thou neither, like a bellows, swell'd thy face,
As if thou wert to blow the burning mass
Of melting ore. Dryden.

BELLUINE. adj. [belluinus, Lat.] Beastly; belonging to a beast; savage; brutal.

If human actions were not to be judged, men would have no advantage over beasts. At this rate the animal and belluine life would be the best. Asterbury.

BE/LLY. n. f. [balg, Dutch; bol, bala, Welch.]

1. That part of the human body which reaches from the breast to the thighs, containing the bowels.

The body's members—
Rebell'd against the belly; thus accus'd it;—
That only like a gulf it did remain,
Still cupboarding the viand, never bearing
Like labour with the rest. Shakespeare.

2. In beasts, it is used, in general, for that part of the body next the ground.

And the Lord said unto the serpent, Upon thy belly shalt thou go, and dust shalt thou eat all the days of thy life. Genesis.

3. The womb; in this sense, it is commonly used ludicrously of familiarity.

I shall answer that better, than you can the getting up of the negro's belly: the Moor is with child by you. Shakespeare.

The secret is grown too big for the pretence, like Mrs. Primly's big belly. Congreve.

3. In law.

Benefit of clergy is an ancient liberty of the church, when a priest, or one within orders, is arraigned of felony before a secular judge, he may pray his clergy; that is, pray to be delivered to his ordinary, to purge himself of the offence objected to him; and this might be done in case of murder. The ancient law, in this point of clergy, is much altered; for clerks are no more delivered to their ordinaries to be purged, but now every man, though not within orders, is put to read at the bar, being found guilty, and convicted of such felony as this benefit is granted for; and so burnt in the hand, and set free for the first time, if the ordinary's commissioner, or deputy, standing by, do say, Legit ut clericus; or, otherwise, suffereth death for his transgression. Cowell.

TO BENEFIT. v. a. [from the noun.] To do good to; to advantage.

What course I mean to hold, Shall nothing benefit your knowledge. Shaksp.

He was so far from benefiting trade, that he did it a great injury, and brought Rome in danger of a famine. Arbutnot.

TO BENEFIT. v. n. To gain advantage; to make improvement.

To tell you therefore what I have benefited herein, among old renowned authors, I shall spare. Milton.

BENEFIT. adj. [See NEBPT.] Named; marked out: an obsolete word.

Much greater gifts for guerdon thou shalt gain, Than kid or collet, which I thee benefit; Then up, I say. Spenser.

TO BENEFIT. v. a. [from net.] To ensnare; to surround as with toils.

Being thus benefitted round with villains, Ere I could mark the prologue, to my bane They had begun the play. Shaksp.

BENEFOLENCE. n. f. [from benefolentia, Lat.]

TO BENIGHT. v. a. [from night.]

1. To involve in darkness; to darken; to throw with the shades of night.

He that has light within his own clear breast May sit 't' th' center, and enjoy bright day;

But he that hides a dark soul, and foul thoughts, Benighted walks under the mid-day sun;

Himself is his own dungeon. Milton.

Those bright stars that did adorn our hemisphere, as those dark shades that did benight it, vanish. Boyle.

A storm begins, the raging waves run high, The clouds look heavy, and benight the sky. Garth.

The miserable race of men that live Benighted half the year, benumm'd with frosts

Under the polar bear. Philips.

2. To surprise with the coming on of night.

Being benighted, the sight of a candle, I saw a good way off, directed me to a young shepherd's house. Sidney.

Here some benighted angel, in his way, Might ease his wings; and, seeing heav'n appear

In its best work of mercy, think it there. Dryden.

3. To debar from intellectual light; to cloud with ignorance.

But what so long in vain, and yet unknown By poor mankind's benighted wit, is sought,

Shall in this age to Britain first be shown. Dryden.

BENIGN. adj. [from benignus, Lat.] It is pronounced without the g, as if written benine; but the g is preserved in benignity.

1. Kind; generous; liberal; actually good. See BENEFICENT.

Although he enjoys the good that is done him, he is unconcerned to value the benignity of him that does it. South.

2. Actual kindness.

He which useth the benefit of any special benignity, may enjoy it with good conscience. Hooker.

The king was desirous to establish peace rather by benignity than blood. Hayward.

3. Salubrity; wholesome quality; friendliness to vital nature.

Bones receive a quicker agglutination in sanguine than in cholerick bodies, by reason of the benignity of the serum, which tendeth out better matter for a callus. Wifeman.

BENIGNLY. adv. [from benign.] Favourably; kindly; graciously.

'Tis amazement more than love, Which her radiant eyes do move;

If less splendour wait on thine, Yet they so benignly shine,

I would turn my dazzled sight To behold their milder light. Waller.

Oh truly good, and truly great!

For glorious as he rose, benignly so he set. Prior.

BENISON. n. f. [benir, to bless; benisson, Fr.] Blessing; benediction: not now used, unless ludicrously.

We have no such daughter; nor shall ever see That face of hers again; therefore, begone

Without our grace, our love, our benison. Shaksp.

Unmuffle, ye fair stars, and thou, fair moon, That won't it to love the traveller's benison. Milton.

Then thy straight rule set virtue in my sight,
The crooked line reforming by the right;
My reason took the bent of thy command,
Was form'd and polish'd by the skilful hand

9. Tendency; flexion; particular direction.
The exercising the understanding, in the several ways of reasoning, teacheth the mind suppleness, to apply itself more dexterously to bents and turns of the matter, in all its researches.

10. A stalk of grass, called bent-grass.
His spear, a bent both stiff and strong,
And well near of two inches long;
The pile was of a horse-fly's tongue,
Whose sharpness naught reversed.

Then the flowers of the vines; it is a little dust, like the dust of a bent, which grows upon the cluster, in the first coming forth.
June is drawn in a mantle of dark grass-green, upon his head a garland of bents, kingcups, and maidenhair.

BENTING Time. [from bent.] The time when pigeons feed on bents before peas are ripe.

Bare *bent*ing times, and moulting months, may come,
When, lagging late, they cannot reach their home.

To BENU'M. v. a. [benumen, Saxon.]
1. To make torpid; to take away the sensation and use of any part by cold, or by some obstruction.

So stings a snake that to the fire is brought,
Which harmless lay with cold benum'd before.

The winds blow moist and keen, which bids us seek
Some better shroud, some better warmth to cherish

Our limbs benum'd.
My sinews slacken, and an icy stiffness

Bennus my blood.
It seizes upon the vitals, and benums the senses;
and where there is no sense, there can be no pain.

Will they be the less dangerous, when warmth shall bring them to themselves, because they were once frozen and benumbed with cold?

2. To stupify.
These accents were her last: the creeping death Benum'd her senses first, then stopp'd her breath.

BENZO'IN. n. f. A medicinal kind of resin imported from the East Indies, and vulgarly called benjamin. It is procured by making an incision in a tree, whose leaves resemble those of the lemon tree. The best comes from Siam, and is called amgdaloides, being interspersed with white spots, resembling broken almonds.

The liquor we have distilled from benzoin, is subject to frequent vicissitudes of fluidity and firmness.

BENZOIN Tree. See BENJAMIN TREE.

To BEPAINT. v. a. [from paint.] To cover with paint.

Thou know'st, the mask of night is on my face,
Else would a maiden blush *be*paint my cheek.

To BEPINCH. v. a. [from pinch.] To mark with pinches.

To BEQUEATH. v. a. [cpise, Sax. a will.] To leave by will to another.

She had never been disinherited of that goodly portion, which nature had so liberally bequeath'd to her.

BER

Let's choose executors, and talk of wills;
And yet not so—for what can we bequeath,
Save our deposed bodies to the ground? Shaksp.
My father bequeath'd me by will but a poor thousand crowns.
Methinks this age seems resolved to bequeath posterity somewhat to remember it.
For you, whom best I love and value most,
But to your service I bequeath my ghost.

BEQUEATHMENT. n. f. [from bequeath.] A legacy.

BEQUEST. n. f. [from bequeath.] Something left by a will; a legacy.

Some never ripen to be sweet, as tamarinds, berberries, crabs, sloes, &c.

To BERE'AVE. v. n. preter. I bereaved, or bereft. part. bereft. [berberis, Saxon.]

1. To strip of; to deprive of. It has generally the particle of before the thing taken away.

Madam, you have bereft me of all words,
Only my blood speaks to you in my veins.

That when thou com'st to kneel at Henry's feet,
Thou may'st bereave him of his wits with wonder.

There was never a prince bereaved of his dependencies by his council, except there hath been an overgreatness in one counsellor.

The sacred priests with ready knives bereave the beasts of life.

To deprive us of metals, is to make us mere savages; it is to bereave us of all arts and sciences of history and letters, nay of revealed religion too, that ineffable favour of Heaven.

2. Sometimes it is used without of.

Whereon I live! thy gentle looks, thy aid,
Thy counsel in this uttermost distress.

3. To take away from.
All your interest in those territories
Is utterly bereft you, all is lost.

The works of nature do always aim at that which cannot be *better*ed. Hooker.

He hath borne himself beyond the promise of his age; he hath, indeed, *better*ed expectation, than you must expect of me to tell you. Shakespeare.

What you do Still *better*s what is done; when you speak sweet, I'd have you do it ever. Shakespeare.

3. To advance; to support.

The king thought his honour would suffer, during a treaty; to better a party. Bacon.

BETTER. n. f. [from the adjective.] Superior; one to whom precedence is to be given.

Their bettors would be hardly found, if they did not live among men, but in a wilderness by themselves. Hooker.

The courtesy of nations allows you my better, in that you are the first-born. Shakespeare.

That ye thus hospitably live, Is mighty grateful to your bettors, And makes e'en gods themselves your debtors. Prior.

I have some gold and silver by me, and shall be able to make a shift, when many of my bettors are starving. Swift.

BETTOR. n. f. [from To bet.] One that lays bets or wagers.

I observed a stranger among them of a gentler behaviour than ordinary; but notwithstanding he was a very fair bettor, nobody would take him up. Addison.

BETTY. n. f. [probably a cant word, signifying an instrument which does what is too often done by a maid within.] An instrument to break open doors.

Record the stratagems, the arduous exploits, and the nocturnal scalades of needy heroes, describing the powerful betty, or the artful pick-lock. Arbutnot.

BETWEEN. prep. [betweonan, betpman; Sax. from the original word þwa, two.]

1. In the intermediate space.

What modes Of smell the headlong lions between And bound sagacious on the tainted green? Pope.

2. From one to another; noting intercourse.

He should think himself unhappy, if things should go so between them, as he should not be able to acquit himself of ingratitude towards them both. Bacon.

3. Belonging to two in partnership.

I ask, whether Castor and Pollux, with only one soul between them, which thinks and perceives in one what the other is never conscious of, are not two distinct persons? Locke.

4. Bearing relation to two.

If there be any discord or suits between them and any of the family, they are compounded and appeased. Bacon.

Friendship requires, that it be between two at least; and there can be no friendship where there are not two friends. South.

5. In separation, or distinction of one from the other.

Their natural constitutions put so wide a difference between some men, that art would never master. Locke.

Children quickly distinguish between what is required of them, and what not. Locke.

6. Between is properly used of two, and among of more; but perhaps this accuracy is not always preserved.

BETWIXT. prep. [betwix, Saxon. It has the same signification with between, and is indifferently used for it.]

1. In the midst of two.

Hard by, a cottage chimney smokes, From betwixt two aged oaks. Milton.

Methinks, like two black storms on either hand, Our Spanish army and your Indians stand; This only place betwixt the clouds is clear. Dryden.

If contradicting interests could be mixt, Nature herself has cast a bar betwixt. Dryden.

2. From one to another.

Five years since there was some speech of marriage betwixt myself and her. Shakespeare.

BEVEL. n. f. In masonry and joinery, a kind of square, one leg of which is frequently crooked, according to the sweep of an arch or vault. It is moveable on a point or centre, and so may be set to any angle. An angle that is not square, is called a bevil angle, whether it be more obtuse, or more acute, than a right angle. Builder's Dict.

Their houses are very ill built, their walls bevil, without one right angle in any apartment. Swift.

To BEVEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut to a bevel angle.

These rabbets are ground square; but the rabbets on the groundsel are bevelled downwards, that rain may the freelier fall off. Moxon.

BEVER. See BEAVER.

BEVERAGE. n. f. [from bevere, to drink, Ital.]

1. Drink; liquor to be drank in general.

I am his cupbearer; If from me he have wholesome beverage, Account me not your servant. Shakespeare.

Grains, pulses, and all sorts of fruits, either bread or beverage, may be made almost of all. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

A pleasant beverage he prepar'd before, Of wine and honey mix'd. Dryden.

The

BEW

The coarse lean gravel on the mountain sides, Scare dewy beverage for the bees provides. Dry.

2. Beverage, or water cyder, is made by putting the mure into a vat, adding water, as you desire it stronger or smaller. The water should stand forty eight hours on it, before you press it; when it is pressed, tun it up immediately. Mortimer.

3. A treat upon wearing a new suit of clothes.

4. A treat at first coming into a prison, called also gamp.

BE'VY. n. f. [bevia, Ital.]

1. A flock of birds.

2. A company; an assembly.

And in the midst thereof upon the floor,

A lovely bevy of fair ladies fate, Courtied of many a jolly paramour. Fairy Queen.

They on the plain

Long had not walk'd, when, from the tents, behold

A bevy of fair women. Milton.

Nor rode the nymph alone,

Around a bevy of bright damsels shone. Pope.

To BEWA'LL. v. a. [from wail.] To bemoan;

to lament; to express sorrow for.

In this city he

Hath widow'd and unchilded many a one, Which to this hour bewail the injury. Shakespeare.

Yet wiser Ennius gave command to all

His friends, not to bewail his funeral.

Sir John Denham.

I cannot but bewail, as in their first principles, the miseries and calamities of our children. Addison.

To BEWA'LL. v. n. To express grief.

Thy ambition,

Thou scarlet sin, robb'd this bewailing land

Of noble Buckingham, my father-in-law. Shaksf.

To BEWA'RE. v. n. [from be and ware, or war];

that is, cautious; thus, in an old treatise, I have found, be ye ware. See WARY. Lepajuan, Sax.

warer, Danish.

1. To regard with caution; to be suspicious of danger from; generally the particle of goes before the thing which excites caution.

You must beware of drawing or painting clouds, winds and thunder, towards the bottom of your piece. Dryden.

Every one ought to be very careful to beware

what he admits for a principle. Locke.

Warn'd by the fylph, oh, pious maid beware!

This to disclose is all thy guardian can;

Beware of all, but most beware of man. Pope.

2. It is observable, that it is only used in such forms of speech as admit the word be; thus we say, be may beware, let him beware, he will beware;

but not, he did beware, or he has been ware.

To BEWE'P. v. a. [from weep.] To weep over or upon; to bedew with tears.

Old fond eyes,

Beweep this cause again; I'll pluck ye out,

And cast you, with the waters that you lose,

To temper clay. Shakespeare.

Larded all with sweet flowers,

Which beset to the grave did go,

With true love showers. Shakespeare.

To BEWET. v. a. [from wet.] To wet; to moisten; to bedew; to water.

His napkin, with his true tears all bevet,

Can do no service on her sorrowful cheeks.

Shakespeare's Titus Andronicus.

To BEWILDER. v. a. [from wild.] To lose in pathless places; to confound for want of a plain road; to perplex; to entangle; to puzzle.

We parted thus; I homeward sped my way,

Bewild'rd in the wood till dawn of day. Dryden.

We no solution of our question find;

Your words bewilder, not direct the mind.

Blackmore.

Our understanding traces 'em in vain,

Lost and bewilder'd in the fruitless search. Addison.

It is good sometimes to lose and bewilder ourselves in such studies. Watts.

To BEWITCH. v. a. [from witch.]

1. To injure by witchcraft, or fascination, or charms.

Look how I am bewitch'd; behold, mine arm

Is like a blasted sapling wither'd up. Shakespeare.

BEY

I have foresworn his company hourly this twenty years, and yet I am bewitch'd with the rogue's company. If the rascal has not given me medicines to make me love him, I'll be hang'd!

Shakespeare.

My flocks are free from love, yet look so thin;

What magick has bewitch'd the woolly dams,

And what ill eyes behold the tender lambs? Dry.

2. To charm; to please to such a degree, as to take away the power of resistance.

Doth even beauty beautify,

And most bewitch the wretched eye. Sidney.

The charms of poetry our souls bewitch;

The curse of writing is an endless itch. Dryden.

I do not know, by the character that is given of her works, whether it is not for the benefit of mankind that they were lost; they were filled with such bewitching tenderness and rapture, that it might have been dangerous to have given them a reading. Addison.

BEWITCHERY. n. f. [from bewitch.] Fascination; charm; resistless prevalence.

There is a certain bewitchery, or fascination in words, which makes them operate with a force

beyond what we can give an account of. South.

BEWITCHMENT. n. f. [from bewitch.] Fascination; power of charming.

I will counterfeit the bewitchment of some popular man, and give it bountifully to the desirers.

Shakespeare.

To BEWRA'Y. v. a. [peegan, bepegan, Sax.]

1. To betray; to discover perfidiously.

Fair feeling words he wisely, gan display,

And, for her humour fitting purpose, gain

To tempt the cause itself for to bewray. Fairy Queen.

2. To shew; to make visible: this word is now little in use.

She saw a pretty blush in Philodæa's cheeks betray a modest discontentment. Sidney.

Men do sometimes bewray that by deeds, which to confess they are hardly drawn. Hooker.

Next look on him that seems for counsel fit,

Whose silver locks bewray his store of days. Fairfax.

BEWRA'YER. n. f. [from bewray.] Betrayer;

discoverer; divulger.

When a friend is turned into an enemy, and a betrayer of secrets, the world is just enough to accuse the perfidiousness of the friend. Addison.

BEYOND. prep. [beeyond, beeyondan, Saxon.]

1. Before; at a distance not yet reached.

What's fame? a fancy'd life in others breath,

A thing beyond us, ev'n before our death:

Just what you hear, you have. Pope.

2. On the farther side of.

Neither is it beyond the sea, that thou shouldst say, Who shall go over the sea for us, and bring it unto us. Deuteronomy, xxx. 13.

Now we are on land, we are but between death and life; for we are beyond the old world and the new. Bacon.

We cannot think men beyond sea will part with their money for nothing. Locke.

3. Farther onward than.

Hethat sees a dark and shady grove,

Stays not, but looks beyond it on the sky. Herbert.

4. Past; out of the reach of.

Beyond the infinite and boundless reach

Of mercy, if thou didst this deed of death,

Art thou damn'd, Hubert. Shakespeare.

Yet these declare

Thy goodness beyond thought, and pow'r divine.

Milton.

The just, wife, and good God, neither does,

nor can require of man any thing that is impossible, or naturally beyond his power to do. South.

Consider the situation of our earth; it is placed so conveniently, that plants flourish; and animals live; this is matter of fact, and beyond all dispute. Bentley.

5. Above; proceeding to a greater degree than.

Timotheus was a man both in power, riches,

parentage, goodness, and love of his people,

beyond any of the great men of his country. Sidney.

BIA

One thing, in this enormous accident, is, I must confess, to me beyond all wonder. Watts.

To his expenses, beyond his income, add debauchery, idleness, and quarrels amongst his servants, whereby his manufactures are disturbed, and his business neglected. Locke.

As far as they carry conviction to any man's understanding, my labour may be of use: beyond the evidence it carries with it, I advise him to follow any man's interpretation. Locke.

6. Above in excellence.

His fancies are incomparably beyond Juvenal's;

if to laugh and rally, is to be preferred to railing and declaiming. Dryden.

7. Remote from; not within the sphere of.

With equal mind, what happens, let us bear;

Nor joy, nor grieve too much for things beyond our care. Dryden's Fables.

8. To go beyond, is to deceive; to circumvent.

She made earnest benefit of his jest, forcing him to do her such services, as were both cumbersome and costly; while he still thought he went beyond her, because his heart did not commit

the idolatry. Sidney.

That no man go beyond, and defraud his brother in any matter. 1 Tim. iv. 6.

BE'ZEL. n. f. That part of a ring in which

BE'ZIL. } the stone is fixed.

BE'ZOAR. n. f. [from paz, against, and zabar, poison, Perlick.] A medicinal stone, formerly in high esteem as an antidote, and brought from the East Indies, where it is said to be found in the dung of an animal of the goat kind, called pazm; the stone being formed in its belly, and growing to the size of an acorn, and sometimes to that of a pigeon's egg. The peculiar manner of its formation, is now supposed to be fabulous.

The name of this stone is applied to several chymical compositions, designed for antidotes; as mineral, solar, and jovial bezours. Savary. Chém.

BEZOARDICK. adj. [from bezour.] Medicines compounded with bezour.

The bezouricks are necessary to promote sweat, and drive forth the putrid particles. Flyer.

BI'ANGULATED. adj. [from binus and angulus,

BI'ANGULOUS. } Lat.] Having two corners

or angles. Ditt.

BI'AS. n. f. [bias, Fr. said to come from bibao, an old Gaulish word, signifying cross, or thwart.]

1. The weight lodged on one side of a bowl, which turns it from the straight line.

Madam, we'll play at bowls—

—'Twill make me think the world is full of rubs,

And that my fortune runs against the bias. Shaksf.

2. Any thing which turns a man to a particular course; or gives the direction to his measures.

You have been mitook:

But nature to her bias drew in that. Shakespeare.

This is that boasted bias of thy mind,

By which one way to dulness 'tis inclin'd. Dry.

Morality influences men's lives, and gives a bias to all their actions. Locke.

Wit and humour, that expose vice and folly, furnish useful diversions. Raillery under such regulations, unbends the mind from feverer contemplations, without throwing it off from its proper bias. Addison's Fables.

Thus nature gives us, let it check our pride,

The virtue nearest to our vice ally'd;

Reason the bias turns to good or ill. Pope.

3. Propension; inclination.

As for the religion of our poet, he seems to have some little bias towards the opinions of Wickliff. Dryden.

To BI'AS. v. a. [from the noun.] To incline to some side; to balance one way; to prejudice.

Were I in no more danger to be misled by ignorance, than I am to be biased by interest, I might give a very perfect account. Locke.

A desire leaning to either side, bias, the judgment strangely; by indifference for every thing

but truth, you will be excited to examine. Watts.

BI'AS. adv. It seems to be used adverbially in the following passage, conformably to the French, metre

B I C

mettre une chose de biais, to give any thing a wrong interpretation.

Every action that hath gone before,
Whereof we have record, trial did draw
Bias and thwart, not answering the aim.

Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

In the following passage it seems to be an adjective. Swelled, as the bowl on the biased side. This is not used.

Blow till thy bias cheek
Outwell the cholic of puffed Aquilon.

Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

BIB. n. f. A small piece of linen put upon the breasts of children over their clothes.

I would fain know, why it should not be as noble a task, to write upon a bib and hanging-sleeves, as on the bullae and priest's exta.

To BIB. v. n. [bibo, Lat.] To tipple; to sip; to drink frequently.

He playeth with bibbing mother Meröe, as though so named, because she would drink mere wine without water.

To appease a froward child, they gave him drink as often as he cried; so that he was constantly bibbing, and drank more in twenty-four hours than I did.

BIBACIOUS. adj. [bibax, Lat.] Addicted to drinking.

BIBACITY. n. f. [bibacitas, Lat.] The quality of drinking much.

BIBBER. n. f. [from To bib.] A tippler; a man that drinks often.

BIBLER. n. f. [from bibulum, a book; called by way of excellence, The book.] The sacred volume in which is contained the revelations of God.

If we pass from the apostolick to the next ages of the church, the primitive christians looked on their bibles as their most important treasure.

Government of the Tongue.

We must take heed how we accustom ourselves to a slight and irreverent use of the name of God, and of the phrases and expressions of the holy bible, which ought not to be applied upon every flight occasion.

In questions of natural religion, we should confirm and improve, or connect our reasonings by the divine assistance of the bible.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. n. f. [from biblia, and graphein, to write.] A writer of books; a transcriber.

BIBLIOTHECAL. adj. [from bibliotheca, Lat.] Belonging to a library.

BIBULOUS. adj. [bibulus, Lat.] That which has the quality of drinking moisture; spongy.

Strow'd bibulous above, I see the sands,
The pebbly gravel next, and gutter'd rocks.

BICAPSULAR. adj. [bicapsularis, Lat.] Having the feed vessel divided into two parts.

BICE. n. f. The name of a colour used in painting. It is either green or blue.

A piece of flesh it exchanged from the bicipital muscle of either party's arm.

TO BICKER. v. n. [bicere, Welch, a contest.]

1. To skirmish; to fight without a set battle; to fight off and on.

They fell to such a bickering, that he got a halting, and lost his picture.

In thy face
I see thy fury; if I longer stay,
We shall begin our ancient bickerings.

2. To quiver; to play backward and forward. And from about him fierce effusion row'd

Of smoke, and bickering flame, and sparkles dire.

B I D

An icy gale, oft shifting o'er the pool,
Breathes a blue film, and in its mid career,
Arrests the bickering stream.

BICKERER. n. f. [from the verb.] A skirmisher.

BICKERN. n. f. [apparently corrupted from beakiron.] An iron ending in a point.

A blacksmith's anvil is sometimes made with a pike, or bickern, or beakiron, at one end.

BICORNE. } adj. [bicornis, Lat.] Having

BICORNOUS. } two horns.

We should be too critical, to question the letter Y, or bicornous element of Pythagoras; that is, the making of the horns equal.

BICORPORAL. adj. [bicorpor, Lat.] Having two bodies.

TO BID. v. a. pret. I bid, bad, bade, I have bid, or bidden, [biddan, Saxon.]

1. To desire; to ask; to call; to invite. I am bid forth to supper, Jessica.

There are my keys. Go ye into the highways, and, as many as you shall find, bid to the marriage.

We ought, when we are bidden to great feasts and meetings, to be prepared before-hand.

2. To command; to order; before things or persons.

Saint Withold footed thrice the wold,
He met the nightmare and her nine fold,
Bid her alight, and her troth plight.

He chid the sisters,
When first they put the name of king upon me,
And bade them speak to him.

Haste to the house of sleep, and bid the god,
Who rules the nightly visions with a nod,
Prepare a dream.

Curse on the tongue that bids this general joy.
—Can they be friends of Antony, who revel
When Antony's in danger?

Thames heard the numbers as he flow'd along,
And bade his willows learn the moving song.

Acquire a government over your ideas, that they may come when they are called, and depart when they are bidden.

3. To offer; to propose: as, to bid a price.

Come, and be true.—
—Thou bidst me to my loss; for true to thee
Were to prove false.

When a man is resolute to keep his fins while he lives, and yet unwilling to relinquish all hope, he will embrace that profession which bids fairest to the reconciling those so distant interests.

As when the goddesses came down of old,
With gifts their young Dardanian judge they try'd,
And each bade high to win him to their side.

To give interest a share in friendship, is to sell it by inch of candle; he that bids most shall have it: and when it is mercenary, there is no depending on it.

4. To proclaim; to offer; or to make known by some public voice.

Our bans thrice bid! and for our wedding day
My kerchief bought! then press'd, then forc'd away.

5. To pronounce; to declare.

You are retir'd,
As if you were a feasted one, and not
The hosts of the meeting; pray you, bid
These unknown friends to's welcome.

Divers as we pass'd by them, put their arms a little abroad; which is their gesture, when they bid any welcome.

How, Didius, shall a Roman, fore repuls'd,
Greet your arrival to this distant life?

How bid you welcome to these thatter'd legions?

6. To denounce.

Thyself and Oxford, with five thousand men,
Shall cross the seas, and bid false Edward battle.

She bid war to all that durst supply
The place of those her cruelty made die.

B I E

The captive cannibal, oppress'd with chains,
Yet braves his foes, reviles, provokes, disdains;
Of nature fierce, untameable, and proud,
He bids defiance to the gaping crowd,
And spent at last, and speechless, as he lies,
With fiery glances mocks their rage, and dies.

7. To pray. See BEAD.

If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed.

When they desired him to tarry longer with them, he consented not, but bade them farewell.

8. To bid beads is to distinguish each bead by a prayer.

By some haycock, or some shady thorn,
He bids his beads both even long and morn.

BIDALE. n. f. [from bid and ale.] An invitation of friends to drink at a poor man's house, and there to contribute charity.

BIDDEN. part. pass. [from To bid.]

1. Invited.

There were two of our company bidden to a feast of the family.

Madam, the bidden guests are come.

2. Commanded.

'Tis these that early taint the female soul,
Instruct the eyes of young coquettes to roll,
Teach infants cheeks a bidden blush to know,
And little hearts to flutter at a beau.

BIDDER. n. f. [from To bid.] One who offers or proposes a price.

He looked upon several dresses which hung there exposed to the purchase of the best bidding.

BIDDING. n. f. [from bid.] Command; order.

How, say'st thou, that Macduff denies his person

At our great bidding?

At his second bidding, darkness fled,
Light shone, and order from disorder sprung.

TO BIDE. v. a. [bidan, Saxon.] To endure; to suffer: commonly to abide.

Poor naked wretches, wheresoe'er you are,
That bide the pelting of this pitiless storm.

The wary Dutch this gathering storm forefaw,
And durst not bide it on the English coast.

TO BIDE. v. n.

1. To dwell; to live; to inhabit.

All knees to thee shall bow, of them that bide
In heav'n or earth, or under earth in hell.

2. To remain in a place.

Safe in a ditch he bides,
With twenty trench'd gashes on his head;
The least a death to nature.

3. To continue in a state.

And they also, if they bide not still in unbelief, shall be grafted in.

4. It has probably all the significations of the word abide; which see: but it being grown somewhat obsolete, the examples of its various meanings are not easily found.

BIDENTAL. adj. [bidens, Lat.] Having two teeth.

Ill management of forks is not to be helped, when they are only bidental.

BIDING. n. f. [from bide.] Residence; habitation.

At Antwerp has my constant biding been.

BIENNIAL. adj. [biennius, Lat.] Of the continuance of two years.

BIER. n. f. [from To bear, as feretrum, in Lat. from fero.] A carriage, or frame of wood, on which the dead are carried to the grave.

And now the prey of fowls he lies,
Nor wail'd of friends, nor laid on groaning bier.

They bore him barefaced on the bier,
And on his grave rain'd many a tear.

He must not float upon his wat'ry bier, Unwept.

Vol. I. No. 5. Y Griefs

Griefs always green, a household fill in tears:
Sad pomps, a threshold throng'd with daily biers,
And liveries of black. Dryden's Farnal.

Make as if you hang'd yourself, they will convey your body out of prison in a bier.
Arbutnot's John Bull.

BLESTINGS. n. f. [blytting, Saxon.] The first milk given by a cow after calving, which is very thick.

And twice besides, her blestings never fail
To store the dairy with a brimming pail. Dryden.

BIFIDATED. } term.] Divided into two;
split in two; opening with a cleft.

BIFOLD. adj. [from binus, Lat. and fold.]
Twofold; double.

If beauty have a foul, this is not she;
If souls guide vows, if vows are sanctimony,
If sanctimony be the gods delight,
If there he rule in unity itself,
This is not she; O madness of discourse!
That cause sets up with and against thyself!

Bifid authority. Shaksp. Troilus and Cressida.

BIFORMED. adj. [biformis, Lat.] Compounded of two forms or bodies.

BIFURCATED. adj. [from binus, two, and furca, a fork, Lat.] Shooting out, by a division, into two heads.

into two, and finely reticulated all over.

BIFURCATION. n. f. [from binus and furca,
Lat.] Division into two; opening into two parts.

The first catachrestical and far derived similitude, it holds with man; that is, in a bifurcation, or division of the root into two parts.

BIG. adj. [This word is of uncertain, or unknown etymology; Junius derives it from bayd- i; Skinner from bug, which, in Danish, signifies the belly.]

1. Great in bulk; large.
Both in addition and division, either of space or duration, when the idea under consideration becomes very big, or very small, its precise bulk becomes obscure and confused. Locke.

A troubled ocean, to a man who fails in it, is,
I think, the biggest object that he can see in motion.

2. Teeming; pregnant; great with young;
with the particle with.
A bear big with young hath seldom been seen.

Lately on yonder swelling bush,
Big with many a common rose,
This early bud began to blush.

His gentle lady,
Big of this gentleman, our theme, deceas'd
As he was born. Shaksp. Cymbeline.

4. Full of something; and desirous, or about,
to give it vent.
The great, th' important day,
Big with the fate of Cato and of Rome.

Now big with knowledge of approaching woes,
The prince of augurs, Halitherses, rose. Pope.

5. Distended; swollen; ready to burst: used often of the effects of passion, as grief, rage.
Thy heart is big; get thee apart and weep.

6. Great in air and mien; proud; swelling; tu-mid; haughty; furly.
How effe, said he, but with a good bold face,
And with big words, and with a stately pace?

To the meaner man, or unknown in the court, seem somewhat solemn, coy, big, and dangerous of look, talk, and air.

If you had looked big, and spit at him, he'd have run. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.

In his prosperous season, he fell under the reproach of being a man of big looks, and of a mean and abject spirit. Clarendon.

Or does the man i' th' moon look big,
Or wear a huger periwig,
Than our own native lunatics. Hudibras.

Of governments that once made such a noise, and looked so big in the eyes of mankind, as being founded upon the deepest counsels, and the strongest force; nothing remains of them but a name. South.

Thou thyself, thus insolent in state,
Art but perhaps some country magistrate,
Whose power extends no farther than to speak
Big on the bench, and scanty weights to break.

To grant big Thraso valour, Phormio sense,
Should indignation give, at least offence. Garrh.

7. Great in spirit; lofty; brave.
What art thou? have not I
An arm as big as thine? a heart as big?

Thy words I grant, are biggs: for I wear not My dagger in my mouth. Shaksp. Cymbeline.

BIGAMIST. n. f. [bigamus, low Lat.] One that has committed bigamy. See BIGAMY.

By the papal canons, a clergyman, that has a wife, cannot have an ecclesiastical benefice; much less can a bigamist have such a benefice, according to that law. Ayliffe.

BIGAMY. n. f. [bigamia, low Latin.]
1. The crime of having two wives at once.
A beauty-wining and distressed widow
Seduc'd the pitch and height of all his thoughts,
To base declension, and loath'd bigamy. Shaksp.

Randal determined to commence a suit against Martin, for bigamy and incest. Arbutnot and Pope.

2. [In the canon law.] The marriage of a second wife, or of a widow, or a woman already debauched; which, in the church of Rome, were considered as bringing a man under some incapaci-ties for ecclesiastical offices.

BIGBELLED. adj. [from big and belly.] Pregnant; with child; great with young.
When we have laugh't to see the fails conceive,
And grow bigbellied with the wanton wind. Shaksp.

Children and bigbellied women require antidotes somewhat more grateful to the palate. Harvey.

So many well-shaped innocent virgins blocked up, and waddle up and down like bigbellied women. Addison.

We pursued our march to the terror of the market people, and the miscarriage of half a dozen big-bellied women. Addison.

BIGGIN. n. f. [beguin, Fr.] A child's cap Sleep now!

Yet not so found, and half so deeply sweet,
As he, whose brow with homely biggin bound,
SnORES out the watch of night. Shaksp.

BIGHT. n. f. It is explained by Skinner, the circumference of a coil of rope.

BIGLY. adv. [from big.] Tumidly; haughti-ly; with a blustering manner.

Wouldst thou not rather chuse a small renown,
To be the may'r of some poor paltry town;
Bigly to look, and barb'rously to speak;
To pound false weights, and scanty measures break? Dryden.

BIGNESS. n. f. [from big.]
1. Bulk; greatness of quantity.

If panicum be laid below, and about the bottom of a root, it will cause the root to grow to an excessive bigness. Bacon.

People were surprized at the bigness and uncouth deformity of the camel. LeStrange's Fables.

The brain of man, in respect of his body, is much larger than any other animal's; exceeding in bigness three oxen's brains. Ray on the Creation.

2. Size; whether greater or smaller; comparative bulk.

Several sorts of rays make vibrations of several bignesses, which, according to their bignesses, excite sensations of several colours; and the air, according to their bignesses, excites sensations of several sounds. Newton's Opticks.

BIGOT. n. f. [The etymology of this word is unknown; but it is supposed, by Camden and others, to take its rise from some occasional phrase.] A man devoted to a certain party; prejudiced in favour of certain opinions; a blind zealot. It is used often with to before the object of zeal; as a bigot to the Cartesian tenets.

Religious spite, and pious spleen bred first
This quarrel, which so long the bigots nurs'd. Tate.

In philosophy and religion, the bigots of all parties, are generally the most positive. Watts.

BIGOTED. adj. [from bigot.] Blindly prepossessed in favour of something; irrationally zealous: with to.

Bigotted to this idol, we disclaim
Rest, health, and ease, for nothing but a name. Garrh.

Presbyterian merit, during the reign of that weak, bigotted, and ill-advised prince, will easily be computed. Swift.

BIGOTRY. n. f. [from bigot.]
1. Blind zeal; prejudice; unreasonable warmth in favour of party or opinions: with the particle to.

Were it not for a bigotry to our own tenets,
we could hardly imagine, that so many absurd, wicked, and bloody principles, should pretend to support themselves by the gospel. Watts.

2. The practice or tenet of a bigot.
Our silence makes our adversaries think we persist in those bigotries, which all good and sensible men despise. Pope.

BIGSWOLN. adj. [from big and swoln.] Tur-gid; ready to burst.

Might my bigswoln heart
Vent all its griefs, and give a loofe to sorrow.

BIG-UDDERED. adj. [from big and udder.] Having large udders; having dugs swelled with milk.

Now driv'n before him, through the arching rock,
Came, tumbling heaps on heaps, th' unnumber'd flock.

Big-udder'd ewes, and goats of female kind. Pope.

BILANDER. n. f. [belandre, Fr.] A small vessel of about eighty tons burden, used for the carriage of goods. It is a kind of hoy, manageable by four or five men, and has masts and sails after the manner of a hoy. They are used chiefly in Holland, as being particularly fit for the canals.

Like bilanders to creep
Along the coast, and land in view to keep. Dry.

BILBERRY. n. f. [from bilug, Sax. a bladder, and berry; according to Skinner; vitis idaea.] A small shrub; and a sweet berry of that shrub;
whortleberry.

Cricket, to Windfor chimneys shalt thou leap
There pinch the maids as blue as bilberries. Shaksp.

BILBO. n. f. [corrupted from Bilboa, where the best weapons are made.] A rapier; a sword.

To be compressed like a good bilbo, in the circumference of a peck, hilt to point, heel to head.

BILBOES. n. f. A sort of stocks, or wooden shackles for the feet, used for punishing offenders at sea.

Methought I lay,
Worse than the mutines, in the bilboes. Shaksp.

BILE. n. f. [bilis, Lat.] A thick, yellow, bitter liquor, separated in the liver, collected in the gall-bladder, and discharged into the lower end of the duodenum, or beginning of the jejunum, by the common duct. Its use is to seethe or blunt the acids of the chyle; because they, being entangled with its sulphurs, thicken it so, that it cannot be sufficiently diluted by the succus pancreaticus, to enter the lacteal vessels. Quincy.

In its progression, soon the labour'd chyle
Receives the confluent rills of bitter bile;
Which, by the liver fever'd from the blood,
And striving through the gall pipe, here unload
Their yellow streams. Blackmore.

BILE. n. f. [bile, Sax. perhaps from bilis, Lat.
This is generally spelt boil; but, I think, less properly.] A fore angry swelling.

But yet thou art my flesh, my blood, my daughter;
Or, rather a disease that's in my flesh;

Thou art a bile in my corrupted blood. Shaksp.

Those biles did run—say so—did not the general run? were not that a botchy fore? Shakes.

A furunculus is a painful tubercle, with a broad basis, arising in a cone. It is generally called a bile, and is accompanied with inflammation, pulsation, and tension. Wifeman.

BILGE. n. f. The compass or breadth of a ship's bottom. Skinner.

To BILGE. v. n. [from the noun.] To spring a leak; to let in water, by striking upon a rock: a sea term; now bulge. Skinner.

BI'LIARY. adv. [from bilis, Lat.] Belonging to the bile.

Voracious animals, and such as do not chew, have a great quantity of gall; and some of them have the biliary duct inserted into the pylorus.

BI'LINGS-GATE. n. f. [A cant word, borrowed from Bilingsgate in London, a place where there is always a crowd of low people, and frequent brawls and foul language.] Ribaldry; foul language.

There stript, fair rhetoric languish'd on the ground,

And shameful bilingsgate her robes adorn. Pope.

BILINGUOUS. adj. [bilinguis, Lat.] Having, or speaking two tongues.

BI'LIOUS. adj. [from bilis, Lat.] Consisting of bile; partaking of bile.

Why bilious juice a golden light puts on,

And floods of chyle in silver currents run. Garth.

When the taste of the mouth is bitter, it is a sign of a redundancy of a bilious alkali. Arbutnot.

To BILK. v. a. [derived by Mr. Lye from the Gothic, bilican.] To cheat; to defraud, by running in debt, and avoiding payment.

Bilk'd stationers for yeomen flood prepar'd. Dryden.

What comedy, what farce can more delight,

Than grinning hunger and the pleasing, fight

Of your bilk'd hopes? Dryden.

BILL. n. f. [bile, Sax. See BALL.] The beak of a fowl.

Their bills were thwarted crossways at the end, and, with these they would cut an apple in two at one snap. Carew.

It may be tried, whether birds may not be made to have greater or longer bills, or greater or longer talons. Bacon.

In his bill

An olive leaf he brings, pacifick sign! Milton.

No crowing cock does there his wings display,

Nor with his horny bill provoke the day. Dryden.

BILL. n. f. [bille, Sax. twibille, a two edged axe.]

1. A kind of hatchet with a hooked point, used in country work, as a bedging bill; so called from its resemblance in form to the beak of a bird of prey.

Standing troops are servants arm'd, who use the lance and sword, as other servants do the fickle, or the bill, at the command of those who entertain them. Temple.

2. A kind of weapon anciently carried by the foot; a battle axe.

Yea distaff women manage rusty bills;

Against thy feat both young and old rebel. Shaks.

BILL. n. f. [billet, French.]

1. A written paper of any kind.

He does receive

Particular addition from the bill

That writes them all alike. Shakspeare.

2. An account of money.

Ordinary expence ought to be limited by a man's estate, and ordered to the best, that the bills may be less than the estimation abroad. Bacon.

3. A law presented to the parliament, not yet made an act.

No new laws can be made, nor old laws abrogated or altered, but by parliament; where bills are prepared, and presented to the two houses. Bacon.

How now for mitigation of this bill,

Urg'd by the commons? doth his majesty

Incline to it, or no? Shakspeare.

4. An act of parliament.

There will be no way left for me to tell you that I remember you, and that I love you, but that one, which needs no open warrant, or secret conveyance; which no bills can preclude, nor no kings prevent. Attorney.

5. A physician's prescription.

Like him that took the doctor's bill,

And swallow'd it instead o' th' pill. Hudibras.

The medicine was prepar'd according to the bill. L'Estrange.

Let them, but under your superiours, kill,

When doctors first have sign'd the bloody bill. Dryden.

6. An advertisement.

And in despair, their empty pit to fill,

Set up some foreign monster in a bill. Dryden.

7. [In law.]

1. An obligation, but without condition or forfeiture for nonpayment. 2. A declaration in writing, that expresseth either the grief and the wrong that the complainant hath suffered by the party complained of; or else some fault, that the party complained of hath committed against some law. This bill is sometimes offered to justices errants in the general assizes; but most to the lord chancellor. It containeth the fact complained of, the damages thereby suffered, and petition of process against the defendant for redress. Covel.

The fourth thing very maturely to be consulted by the jury, is what influence their finding the bill may have upon the kingdom. Swift.

8. A bill of mortality. An account of the numbers that have died in any district.

Most who took in the weekly bills of mortality, made little other use of them, than to look at the foot, how the burials encreased or decreas'd. Graunt.

So liv'd our fires, ere doctors learn'd to kill,

And multiply'd with theirs the weekly bill. Dryden.

9. A bill of Fare. An account of the season of provisions, or of the dishes at a feast.

It may seem somewhat difficult to make out the bills of fare for some of the forementioned suppers. Arbutnot.

10. A bill of exchange. A note ordering the payment of a sum of money in one place, to some person assigned by the drawer or remitter, in consideration of the value paid to him in another place.

The comfortable sentences are bills of exchange, upon the credit of which we lay our cares down, and receive provisions. Taylor.

All that a bill of exchange can do, is to direct to whom money is due, or taken up upon credit, in a foreign country, shall be paid. Locke.

To BILL. v. n. [from bill, a beak.] To carefs, as doves by joining bills; to be fond.

Doves, they say, will bill, after their pecking and their murmuring. Ben Jonson's Catalogue.

Still amorous, and fond, and billing,

Like Philip and Mary on a shilling. Hudibras.

They bill, they tread; Alcione compress'd,

Seven days sits brooding on her floating nest. Dryden.

He that bears the artillery of Jove,

The strong pound'd eagle, and the billing dove. Dryden.

To BILL. v. a. [from bill, a writing.] To publish by an advertisement: a cant word.

His masterpiece was a composition that he billed about under the name of a sovereign antidote. L'Estrange.

BI'LLET. n. f. [billet, French.]

1. A small paper; a note.

When he found this little billet, in which was only written Remember Caesar, he was exceedingly confounded. Clarendon.

2. A ticket directing soldiers at what house to lodge.

3. Billet-doux, or a soft billet; a love letter.

'Twas then, Belinda! if report say true,

Thy eyes first open'd on a billet-doux. Pope.

4. [Bilet, Fr.] a small log of wood for the chimney,

Let us then calculate, when the bulk of a fagot or billet is dilated and rarified to the degree of fire, how vast a place it must take up. Digby on Bodies.

Their billet at the fire was found. Prior.

To BI'LLET. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To direct a soldier by a ticket, or note, where he is to lodge.

Retire thee; go where thou art billetted: Away, I say. Shakspeare.

2. To quarter soldiers.

They remembered him of charging the kingdom, by billetting soldiers. Raleigh.

The counties throughout the kingdom were so incensed, and their affections poisoned, that they refused to suffer the soldiers to be billetted upon them. Clarendon.

BI'LLIARDS. n. f. without a singular. [billard, Fr. of which that language has no etymology; and therefore they probably derived from England both the play and the name, which is corrupted from balyards, yards of sticks with which a ball is driven along a table. Thus Spenser:

Balyards much unfit,
And shuttlecocks misfearing manly wit. Hubbard's Tale.

A game at which a ball is forced against another on a table.

Let it alone; let's to billiards. Shakspeare.

Even nose and cheek, withal,

Smooth as is the billiard ball. Ben Jonson.

Some are forced to bound or fly upwards, almost like ivory balls meeting on a billiard table. Boyle.

When the ball obeys the stroke of a billiard stick, it is not any action of the ball, but bare passion. Locke.

BI'LLOW. n. f. [bilge, Germ. belg, Dan. probably of the same original with bilg, Sax. a bladder.] A wave swollen, and hollow.

From whence the river Dee, as silver clean,

His tumbling billows roll with gentle roar. Spenser.

Billows sink by degrees, even when the wind is down that first stirred them. Wotton.

Chafing Nereus with his trident throws

The billows from the bottom. Danham.

But when loud billows lash the founding shore,

The hoarse rough verse should like the torrent roar. Pope.

To BI'LLOW. v. n. [from the noun.] To swell, or roll, as a wave.

The billowing snow, and violence of the show'r,

That from the hills disperse their dreadful store,

And o'er the vales collected ruin pour. Prior.

BI'LLOWY. adj. [from billow.] Swelling; turgid; wavy.

And whitening down the mossy-tinctur'd stream,

Descends the billowy foam. Thompson.

BIN. n. f. [binne, Sax.] A place where bread, or corn, or wine, is reposit.

The most convenient way of picking hops, is into a long square frame of wood, called a bin. Mortimer.

As when from rooting in a bin,

All powder'd o'er from tail to chin,

A lively maggot falls out,

You know him by his hazel snout. Swift.

BI'NARY. adj. [from binus, Lat.] Two; dual; double.

BI'NARY Arithmetick. A method of computation proposed by Mr. Leibnitz, in which, in lieu of the ten figures in the common arithmetick, and the progression from ten to ten, he has only two figures, and uses the simple progression from two to two. This method appears to be the same with that used by the Chinese four thousand years ago. Chambers.

To BIND. v. a. pret. I bound; particip. pass. bound or bounden. [binban, Sax.]

1. To confine with bonds; to enchain.

Y. 2. thy

B I N

My fingers, write them upon the table of thine heart.

4. To fasten together.
Gather ye together first the tares, and bind them in bundles, to burn them. Matthew.

5. To cover a wound with dressings and bandages: with up.
When he saw him he had compassion on him, and went to him, and bound up his wounds. Luke.

Having filled up the bared cranium with our dressings, we bound up the wound. Wifeman.
6. To oblige by stipulation or oath.
If a man vow a vow, or swear an oath to bind his soul with a bond, he shall not break his word. Numbers.

Swear by the solemn oath, that binds the gods. Pope.
7. To oblige by duty or law; to compel; to constrain.
Though I am bound to every act of duty, I am not bound to that, all slaves are free to. Shakespeare.

Duties expressly required in the plain language of Scripture, ought to bind our consciences more than those which are but dubiously inferred. Watts.
8. To oblige by kindness.

9. To confine; to hinder: with in, if the restraint be local; with up, if it relate to thought or act.
Now I'm cabin'd, cribb'd, confin'd, bound in
To faucy doubts and fears. Shakespeare.

You will sooner, by imagination, bind a bird from singing, than from eating or flying. Bacon.
Though passion be the most obvious and general, yet it is not the only cause that binds up the understanding, and confines it, for the time, to one object, from which it will not be taken off. Locke.

In such a dismal place
Where joy ne'er enters, which the sun ne'er cheers, Bound in with darkness, overspread with damps. Dryden.

10. To hinder the flux of the bowels; to make costive.
Rhubarb hath manifestly in it parts of contrary operations; parts that purge, and parts that bind the body. Bacon.

The whey of milk doth loose, the milk doth bind. Herbert.
11. To restrain.

The more we are bound up to an exact narration, we want more life, and fire, to animate and inform the story. Felton.
12. To bind a book. To put it in a cover.
Was ever book, containing such vile matter,
So fairly bound? Shakespeare.

Those who could never read the grammar,
When my dear volumes touch the hammer,
May think books best, as richest bound. Prior.

13. To bind to. To oblige to serve some one.
If still thou dost retain
The same ill habits, the same follies too,
Still thou art bound to vice, and still a slave. Dryden.

14. To bind to. To contract with any body.
Art thou bound to a wife, seek not to be loosed. 1 Cor.

15. To bind over. To oblige to make appearance.
Sir Roger was staggered with the reports concerning this woman, and would have bound her over to the county sessions. Addison.

I'll creep up into the chimney.—There they always use to discharge their birding-pieces; creep into the kill hole. Shakespeare.

BI'RD'LIME. n. f. [from bird and lime.] A glutinous substance, which is spread upon twigs, by which the birds that light upon them are entangled.

Birdlime is made of the bark of holly: they pound it into a tough paste, that no fibres of the wood be left; then it is washed in a running stream, till no motes appear, and put up to ferment, and scummed, and then laid up for use; at which time they incorporate with it a third part of nut oil, over the fire. But the bark of our lantane, or wayfaring shrub, will make very good birdlime. Chambers.

Holly is of so viscous a juice, as they make birdlime of the bark of it. Bacon's Natural History.

With stores of gather'd glue, contrive
To stop the vents and crannies of their hive;
Not birdlime, or Idean pitch produce
A more tenacious mass of clammy juice. Dryden.

I'm ensnar'd;
Heav'n's birdlime wraps me round, and glues my wings. Dryden.

The woodpecker, and other birds of this kind, because they prey upon flies which they catch with their tongue, have a couple of bags filled with a viscous humour, as if it were a natural birdlime, or liquid glue. Grew.

BI'RD'MAN. n. f. [from bird and man.] A birdcatcher; a fowler.

As a fowler was bending his net, a blackbird asked him what he was doing; why, says he, I am laying the foundations of a city; and so the birdman drew out of sight. L'Estrange.

BIRTH. n. f. [heopð, Sax.]

1. The act of coming into life.

But thou art fair, and at thy birth, dear boy,
Nature and fortune join'd to make thee great.

Shakespeare's King John.

In Spain, our springs like old mens children be,
Decay'd and wither'd from their infancy;
No kindly showers fall on our barren earth,
To hatch the seasons in a timely birth. Dryden.

2. Extraction; lineage.
Most virtuous virgin, born of heavenly birth. Spenser.

All truth I shall relate: nor first can I Myself to be of Grecian birth deny. Denham.

3. Rank which is inherited by descent.

He doth object, I am too great of birth. Shakespeare.

Be just in all you say, and all you do;

Whatever be your birth, you're sure to be

A peer of the first magnitude to me. Dryden.

4. The condition or circumstances in which any man is born.

High in his chariot then Halesus came,

A foe by birth to Troy's unhappy name. Dryden.

5. Thing born; production; used of vegetables, as well as animals.

The people fear me; for they do observe

Unfather'd heirs and loathly births of nature. Shakespeare.

That poets are far rarer births than kings,

Your noblest father prov'd. Ben Jonson.

Who of themselves

Abhor to join: and, by imprudence mix'd,

Produce prodigious births, of body or mind. Milton.

She, for this many thousand years,

Seems to have practis'd with much care,

To frame the race of woman fair;

Yet never could a perfect birth

Produce before, to grace the earth. Waller.

His eldest birth

Flies, mark'd by heaven, a fugitive o'er earth,

Prior.

The vallies smile, and with their flow'ry face,

And wealthy births, confess the flood's embrace. Blackmore.

Others hatch their eggs, and tend the birth, till it is able to lift for itself, Aldison.

6. The act of bringing forth.

That fair Syrian shepherdess,

Who after years of barrenness,

The highly favour'd Joseph bore

To him that serv'd for her before;

And at her next birth, much like thee,

Through pangs fled to felicity. Milton.

7. The seamen call a due or proper distance between ships lying at an anchor, or under sail, a birth. Also the proper place aboard for the mess to put their chests, &c. is called the birth of that mess. Also a convenient place to moor a ship in,

is called a birth. Harris.

BI'RTDAY. n. f. [from birth and day.]

1. The day on which any one is born.

Orient light,

Exhaling first from darkness, they beheld

Birth-day of heaven and earth. Milton.

2. The day of the year in which any one was born, annually observed.

This is my birth-day; as this very day

Was Cælius born. Shakespeare.

They tell me, 'tis my birthday, and I'll keep it

With double pomp of sadness:

'Tis what the day deserves, which gave me breath. Dryden.

Your country dames,

Whose cloaths returning birth-day claims. Prior.

BIRTHDOM. n. f. [This is erroneously, I think, printed in Shakespeare's birthdom. It is derived from birth and dom. See DOM; as kingdom, dukedom.]

Privilege of birth.

Let us rather

Hold fast the mortal sword; and, like good men,

Bestride our down-fall birthdom. Shakespeare.

BI'RTNIGHT. n. f. [from birth and night.]

1. The night on which any one is born.

Th' angelick song in Bethlehem field,

On thy birthnight, that sung the Saviour born.

Paradise Regained.

2. The night annually kept in memory of any one's birth.

A youth more glittering than a birthnight beau. Pope.

BI'RTPLACE. n. f. [from birth and place.] Place where any one is born.

My birthplace hate I, and my love's upon

This enemy's town. Shakespeare.

A degree of stupidity beyond even what we have been charged with, upon the score of our birthplace and climate. Swift.

BI'RTRIGHT. n. f. [from birth and right.] The rights and privileges to which a man is born; the right of the first-born.

Thy blood and virtue

Contend for empire in thee, and thy goodness

Shares with thy birthright. Shakespeare.

Thou hast been found

By merit, more than birthright, Son of God. Milton.

I lov'd her first, I cannot quit the claim,

But will preserve the birthright of my passion. Ormsby.

While no hafeness in this breast I find,

I have not lost the birthright of my mind. Dryden.

To say, that liberty and property are the birthright of the English nation, but that if a prince intrudes them by illegal methods, we must upon no

pretence resist, is to confound governments. Addison.

BIRTHSTRANGL'D. adj. [from birth and strangle.] Strangled or suffocated in being born.

Finger of birthstrangled babe,

Ditch deliver'd by a drab. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

baked, Fr.]

1. A kind of hard dry bread, made to be carried to sea; it is baked for long voyages four times.

The biscuit also in the ships, especially in the Spanish gallees, was grown hoary, and unwholesome. Kneller's Hist.

Many have been cured of dropsies by abstinence from drinks, eating dry biscuit, which creates no thirst, and strong frictions four or five times a-day. Arbutnot on Diet.

2. A composition of fine flour, almonds, and sugar, made by the confectioners.

To BI'SECT. v. a. [from binus and seco, to cut,

Lat.] To divide into two parts.

The rational horizon bisecteth the globe into two equal parts. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

BISECTION. n. f. [from the verb.] A geometrical term, signifying the division of any quantity into two equal parts.

BI'SHOP. n. f. [from episcopus, Lat. the Saxons formed biscop, which was afterwards softened into bishop.] One of the head order of the clergy.

A bishop is an overseer, or superintendent, of religious matters in the Christian church.

Ayliff's Parergon.

You shall find him well accompany'd

With reverend fathers, and well learned bishops. Shakespeare.

Their zealous superstition thinks, or pretends, they cannot do God a greater service, than to destroy the primitive, apostolical, and anciently universal government of the church by bishops. K. Charles.

In case a bishop should commit treason and felony, and forfeit his estate, with his life, the lands of his bishoprick remain still in the church. South.

On the word bishop, in French evêque, I would observe, that there is no natural connection between the sacred office and the letters or sound;

for evêque, and bishop, signify the same office,
though there is not one letter alike in them.

Watts's Logick.

BI'SHOP. n. f. A cant word for a mixture of wine, oranges, and sugar.

Fine oranges,

Well roasted, with sugar and wine in a cup,

They'll make a sweet bishop, when gentle folks

sup. Swift.

To BI'SHOP. v. a. [from the noun.] To confirm; to admit solemnly into the church.

They are prophane, imperfect, oh! too bad,

Except confirm'd and bishoped by thee. Denne.

BI'SHOPRICK. n. f. [biscoprice, Saxon.] The diocese of a bishop; the district over which the jurisdiction of a bishop extends.

It will be fit, that, by the king's supreme power in causes ecclesiastical, they be subordinate under some bishop and bishoprick, of this realm.

Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

A virtuous woman should reject marriage, as a good man does a bishoprick; but I would advise neither to persist in refusing. Addison's Spectator.

Those pastors had episcopal ordination, possessed preferments in the church, and were sometimes promoted to bishopricks themselves.

Swift's Sentiments of a Church of England Man.

BI'SHOPSWOOD. [ammi, Lat.] The name of a plant.

BISK. n. f. [bisque, Fr.] Soup; broth made by boiling several sorts of flesh.

BI'SMUTH. n. f. The same as marcasite; a hard,

white, brittle, mineral substance, of a metalline nature, found at Misnia; supposed to be a recrementitious matter thrown off in the formation of tin. Some esteem it a metal sui generis; though it usually contains some silver. There is an artificial bismuth made, for the shops, of tin. Quincy.

BI'SSENTILE. n. f. [from bis and sextilis, Lat.]

Leap year; the year in which the day, arising from six odd hours in each year, is intercalated.

The year of the sun consisteth of three hundred and sixty-five days and six hours, wanting eleven minutes; which six hours omitted, will, in time, deprave the compute; and this was the occasion of bissexile or leap year. Brown.

Towards the latter end of February is the bissex- tile, or intercalary day: called bissexile, because the sixth of the calends of March is twice repeated. Holder on Time.

BI'SSON. adj. [derived by Skinner from by and fin.] Blind.

But who, oh! who hath seen the mobled

queen,

Run barefoot up and down, threat'ning the flames

With bisson rheum? Shakespeare's Hamlet.

What harm can your bisson conspectivities glean out of this character? Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

BITCH. n. f. [bitch, Saxon.]

1. The female of the canine kind; as the wolf, the dog, the fox, the otter.

And at his feet a bitch wolf fuck did yield To two young babes. Spenser.

I have been credibly informed, that a bitch will nurse, play with, and be fond of young foxes, as much as, and in place of her puppies. Locke.

2. A name of reproach for a woman,

Him you'll call a dog, and her a bitch. Pope.

John had not run a madding so long, had it not been for an extravagant bit of a wife. Arbutnot.

To BITE. v. a. pret. I bit; part. pass. I have bit, or bitten, [bitan, Saxon.]

1. To crush, or pierce with the teeth.

My very enemy's dog, Though he had bit me, should have stood that night Against my fire. Shakespeare.

Such smiling rogues as these, Like rats, oft bite the holy cords in twain,

Too intricate to unloose. Shakespeare.

These are the youths that thunder at a playhouse, and fight for bitten apples. Shakespeare.

He falls; his arms upon his body found, And with his bloody teeth he bites the ground. Dryden.

There was lately a young gentleman bit to the bone, who has now indeed recovered. Taylor.

Their foul mouths have not opened their lips without a falsity; though they have showed their teeth as if they would bite off my nose. Arbutnot and Pope's Mart. Scrib.

2. To give pain by cold.

Here feel we the icy phang, And churlish chiding of the winter's wind;

Which when it bites and blows upon my body, Even till I shrink with cold, I smile. Shakespeare.

Full fifty years harnes'd in rugged steel, I have endur'd the biting winter's blast,

And the feverer heats of parching summer. Roscoe's Ambitious Step-mother.

The bladder should be made of a membranous substance, and extremely dilatible for receiving and containing the urine till an opportunity of emptying it. Kay.

2. It is often filled with wind, to which allusions are frequently made.

That huge great body which the giant bore,
Was vanquish'd quite, and of that monstrous mass
Was nothing left, but like an empty bladder was. Spenser.

A bladder but moderately filled with air, and strongly tied, being held near the fire, grew exceeding turgid and hard; but being brought nearer to the fire, it suddenly broke, with so loud a noise as made us for a while after almost deaf. Boyle.

3. It is usual for those that learn to swim, to support themselves with blown bladders.

I have ventur'd,

Like little wanton boys, that swim on bladders,
These many summers, in a sea of glory;
But far beyond my depth: my highblown pride
At length broke under me. Shakespeare.

4. A blister; a pustule.

BLADDER-NUT. n. f. [staphyladendron, Lat.] A plant.

BLADDER-SENA. n. f. [colutea, Lat.] The name of a plant.

BLADE. n. f. [blæt, bled, Sax. blad, Fr.] The spire of grass before it grows to seed; the green shoots of corn which rise from the seed.

This seems to me the primitive signification of the word blade; from which, I believe, the blade of a sword was first named, because of its similitude in shape; and, from the blade of a sword, that of other weapons or tools.

There is hardly found a plant that yieldeth a red juice in the blade or ear, except it be the tree that beareth sanguis draconis. Bacon.

Send in the feeding flocks betimes, t' invade
The rising bulk of the luxuriant blade. Dryden.

If we were able to dive into her secret recesses, we should find that the smallest blade of grass, or most contemptible weed, has its particular use. Swift.

Hung on every spray, on every blade
Of grass, the myriad dew drops twinkle round. Thomson.

BLADE. n. f. [blatte, Germ. blad, Dutch.]

1. The sharp or striking part of a weapon or instrument, distinct from the handle. It is usually taken for a weapon, and so called probably from the likeness of a sword blade to a blade of grass. It is commonly applied to the knife.

He fought all round about, his thirsty blade
To bathe in blood of faithless enemy. Fairy Queen.

She knew the virtue of her blade, nor would Poll to her fibre with ignoble blood. Dryden.

Be his this sword, whose blade of brags displays
A ruddy gleam; whose hilt a silver blaze. Pope.

2. A brick man, either fierce or gay, called for in contempt. So we say little for courage.

You'll find yourself mistaken, Sir, if you'll take upon you to judge of these blades by their garbs, looks, and outward appearance. L'Estrange.

Then turning about to the hangman, he said,
Dispatch me, I prithee, this troublesome blade. Prior.

BLADE of the Shoulder. n. f. The bone called by BLADEBONE.

anatomists the scapula, or scapular bone.

BLADED. adj. [from blad.] Having blades or spires.

Her silver visage in the wat'ry glafs,
Decking with liquid pearl the bladed glafs. Shakespeare.

As where the lightning runs along the ground,
Nor bladed grass, nor bearded corn succeeds,
But scales of scurf and putrefaction breeds. Dry.

BLAIN. n. f. [blægene, Sax. blæn, Dutch.] A pustule; a botch; a blister.

Itches, blains,
Sow all th' Athenian bosoms, and the crop

Be general leprosy. Shakespeare.

Botches and blains must all his flesh imbosc,
And all his people. Milton.

When'er I hear a rival nam'd,
I feel my body all inflam'd;
Which breaking out in boils and blains,
With yellow filth my linen stains. Swift.

BLAMABLE. adj. [from blame.] Culpable; faulty.

Virtue is placed between two extremes, which are on both sides equally blamable. Dryden.

BLAMABLENESS. n. f. [from blamable.] Fault; the state of being liable to blame; culpableness; faultiness.

BLAMABLY. adv. [from blamable.] Culpably; in a manner liable to censure.

A process may be carried on against a person, that is maliciously or blamably absent, even to a definitive sentence. Asyliffe.

To BLAME. v. a. [blamer, Fr.]

1. To censure; to charge with a fault: it generally implies a slight censure.

Our pow'r
Shall do a court'ry to our wrath, which men
May blame, but not controul. Shakespeare.

Porphyrius, you too far did tempt your fate!
'Tis true your duty to me it became;
But praising that, I must your conduct blame. Dryden.

Each finding, like a friend,
Something to blame, and something to commend. Pope.

2. To blame has usually the particle for before the fault.

The reader must not blame me for making use here all along of the word sentiment. Locke.

3. Sometimes, but rarely, of.
Tomoreus he blam'd of inconsiderate rashness, for that he would busy himself in matters not belonging to his vocation. Knolles's History of the Turks.

BLAME. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Imputation of a fault.

In arms, the praise of success is shared among many; yet the blame of misadventures is charged upon one. Hayward.

They lay the blame on the poor little ones, sometimes passionately enough, to divert it from themselves. Locke.

2. Crime; that which produces or deserves censure.

Who would not judge us to be discharged of all blame, which are confess'd to have no great fault, even by their very word and testimony, in whose eyes no fault of ours hath ever hitherto been accustomed to seem small. Hobbs.

I unspeak mine own detraction: here abjure
The taints and blames I laid upon myself,
For strangers to my nature. Shakespeare.

3. Hurt. Not now in use.

Therewith upon his crest,
With rigour to outrageous he smit,
That a large share it hew'd out of the rest,
And glancing down his shield, from blame him fairly blest. Fairy Queen.

4. There is a peculiar structure of this word, in which it is not very evident whether it be a noun or a verb, but I conceive it to be the noun.

To blame, in French, a tort; culpable; deserving of censure.

You were to blame, I must be plain with you,
To part so slightly with your wife's first gift. Shakespeare.

I do not ask whether they were mistaken; but, whether they were to blame in the manner? Stirling fleet.

Now we should hold them much to blame,
If they went back before they came. Prior.

BLAMEFUL. adv. [from blame and full.] Criminal; guilty; meriting blame.

Is not the causer of these timeless deaths
As blameful as the executioner? Shakespeare.

Bluntwitted lord, ignoble in demeanour,
If ever lady wrong'd her lord too much,
Thy mother took into her blameful bed
Some stern untutor'd churl. Shakespeare.

BLAMELESS. adj. [from blame.]

1. Guiltless; innocent; exempt from censure or blame.

She found out the righteous, and preserved him blameless unto God. Wisdom, x. 5.

The flames ascend on either altar clear,
While thus the blameless maid address'd her pray'r. Dryden.

Such a lessening of our coin will deprive great numbers of blameless men of a fifth part of their estates. Locke.

2. Sometimes it is used with of.
We will be blameless of this thine oath. Job, ii. 17.

BLAMELESSLY. adv. [from blameless.] Innocently; without crime.

It is the wilful opposing explicit articles, and not the not believing them when not revealed, or not with that conviction, against which he cannot blamelessly, without pertinacity, hold out, that will bring danger of ruin on any.

BLAMELESSNESS. n. f. [from blameless.] Innocence; exemption from censure.

Having resolved, with him in Homer, that all is chargeable on Jupiter and fate, they infer, with him, the blamelessness of the inferior agent. Hammond.

BLAMER. n. f. [from blame.] One that blames or finds fault; a censurer. La.

BLA

In me you've hallowed a pagan muse,
And denizond a stranger, who mistaught
By blamers of the times they marr'd, hath fought Virtues in corners. Deane.

BLAMEWORTHY. adj. [from blame and worthy.]
Culpable; blameable; worthy of blame or censure.

Although the same should be blameworthy, yet this age hath forborn to incur the danger of any such blame. Hooker.

TO BLANCH. v. a. [blanchir, Fr.]

1. To whiten; to change from some other colour to white.

You can behold such fights,
And keep the natural ruby of your cheeks,
When mine is blanch'd with fear. Shakespeare.
A way of whiting wax cheaply may be of use;
and we have set down the practice of tradesmen who blanch it. Boyle.

And sin's black dye seems blanch'd by age to virtue. Dryden.

2. To strip or peel such things as have husks.
Their suppers may be bisket, raisins of the sun,
and a few blanch'd almonds. Wise.

3. To flur; to balk; to pass over; to shift away. Not now in use.

The judges thought it dangerous to admit ifs and ands, to qualify treason; whereby every one might express his malice, and blanch his danger.

You are not transported in an action that warms the blood and is appearing holy, to blanch, or take for admitted, the point of lawfulness. Bacon.

TO BLANCH. v. n. To evade; to shift; to speak soft.

Came prologue; and apology too prompt;
Which, with bland words at will, she thus addressed. Milton.

An even calm
Perpetual reign'd, save what the zephyrs bland
Breath'd o'er the blue expanse. Thomson.

TO BLANDISH. v. a. [blandire, Lat.] To smooth; to soften. I have met with this word in no other passage.

Must'ring all her wiles,
With blandid'd parleys, feminine assaults,
Tongue-batteries, she surceas'd not day nor night,
To storm me over-watch'd, and weary'd out.

BLANDISHMENT. n. f. [from blandid; blandi- tia, Lat.]

1. Act of fondness; expression of tenderness by gesture.

The little babe up in his arms he hent,
Who, with sweet pleasure and bold blandishment,
'Gan smile. Spenser.

Approaching two and two; these cowering low
With blandishment. Milton.

2. Soft words; kind speeches.

He was both well and fair spoken, and would use strange sweetness and blandishment of words, where he desired to effect or persuade any thing that he took to heart. Bacon.

3. Kind treatment; caress.

Him Dido now with blandishment detains;
But I suspect the town where Juno reigns.

In order to bring those infidels within the wide circle of whiggish community, neither blandid- ments nor promises are omitted. Swift.

BLANK. adj. [blank, Fr.-derived by Mexage from Albanus, thus: Albanus, albianicus, bianicus, biancus, bianco, blankus, blancus, blank; by others, from blanc, which, in Danish, signifies shining; in conformity to which, the Germans have blanker, to shine; the Saxons, blæcan; and the English, blacch, to whiten.]

cles; but, upon the creditor side, little more than blank paper. Addison.

3. Pale; confused; crushed; dispirited; subdued; depressed.

There without such boast, or sign of joy,
Solicitous and blank, he thus began. Milton.

Adam, soon as he heard
The fatal trespass done by Eve, amaz'd,
Astonied stood, and blank, while horror chill
Ran through his veins, and all his joints relax'd.

But now no face divine contentment wears;
'Tis all blank sadness, or continual fears. Pope.

4. Without rhyme; where the rhyme is blank- ed, or missed.

The lady shall say her mind freely, or the blank
verse shall halt for it. Shakespeare.

Long have your ears been fill'd with tragick parts;

Blood and blank verse have harden'd all your hearts.

Our blank verse, where there is no rhyme to support the expression, is extremely difficult to such as are not masters in the tongue. Addison.

BLANK. n. f. [from the adjective.]

TO BLANK. v. a. [from blank; blanchir, Fr.]

1. To damp; to confuse; to dispirit.

Each opposite, that blanks the face of joy,
Meet what I would have well, and it destroy.

Dagon must stoop, and shall ere long receive
Such a discomfit, as shall quite despoil him

Of all these boasted trophies won on me,
And with confusion blank his worshippers. Milton.

If the atheist, when he dies, should find that his soul remains, how will this man be amazed, and blanked? Tillotson.

2. To efface; to annul.

All former purposes were blanked, the gover-nour at a bay, and all that charge lost and cancelled.

BLANKET. n. f. [blankette, Fr.]

1. A woollen cover, soft, and loosely woven, spread commonly upon a bed, over the linen sheet,
for the procurement of warmth.

Nor heav'n peep through the blanket of the dark,
To cry, hold! hold! Shakespeare.

The abilities of man must fall short on one side or other, like too scanty a blanket when you are a-bed; if you pull it upon your shoulders, you leave your feet bare; if you thrust it down upon your feet, your shoulders are uncovered. Temple.

Himself among the storied chiefs he spies,
As from the blanket high in air he flies. Pope.

2. A kind of pear, sometimes written blanket.

Blaspheme their feeder, and forget their lord. Pope.

TO BLASPHEME. v. n. To speak blasphemy.

Liver of blaspheming Jew. Shakespeare.

I punished them oft in every synagogue, and compelled them to blaspheme. Acts.

BLASPHEMER. n. f. [from blaspheme.] A wretch that speaks of God in impious and irreverent terms.

Who was before a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and injurious. 1 Timothy.

Even that blasphemer himself would inwardly reverence his reprover, as he in his heart really despises him for his cowardly base silence. South.

Deny the curst blasphemer's tongue to rage,
And turn God's fury from an impious age. Tickell.

Should each blasphemer quite escape the rod,
Because the insult's not to man, but God. Pope.

BLASPHEMOUS. adj. [from blaspheme.] It is usually spoken with the accent on the first syllable, but used by Milton with it on the second.] Im-piously irreverent with regard to God.

O man, take heed how thou the gods do move,
To cause full wrath which thou can't not resist;

Blasphemous words the speaker vain do prove.

And dar'st thou to the Son of God propound,
To worship thee accurst; now more accurst

For this attempt, bolder than that on Eve,
And more blasphemous? Milton.

A man can hardly pass the streets, without having his ears grated with horrid and blasphemous oaths and curses. Tillotson.

How ready zeal for interest and party, is to charge atheism on those, who will not, without examining, submit, and blindly swallow their nonsense.

3. Without judgment or direction.

How seas and earth, and air, and active flame,
Fell through the mighty void; and, in their fall,
Were blindly gathered in this goodly ball.

BLINDMAN'S BUFF, n. f. A play in which some one is to have his eyes covered, and hunt out the rest of the company.

Disguis'd in all the mask of night,
We left our champion on his flight;
At blindman's buff to grope his way,
In equal fear of night and day.

He imagines I shut my eyes again; but surely he fancies I play at blindman's buff with him; for he thinks I never have my eyes open.

BLINDNESS, n. f. [from blind.]

1. Want of sight.

I will finite every house of the people with blindness.

2. Ignorance.

2. Ignorance; intellectual darkness.

All the rest as born of savage brood,
But with base thoughts are into blindness led,
And kept from looking on the lightfome day.

Nor can we call it choice, when what we chuse,
Folly and blindness only could refuse.

Whensoever we would proceed beyond these simple ideas, we fall presently into darkness and difficulties, and can discover nothing farther but our own blindness and ignorance.

BLINDNETTLE. n. f. [scrofularia.] A plant.

BLINDSIDE. n. f. [from blind and side.] Weakness; foible; weak part.

He is too great a lover of himself; this is one of his blindnesses; the best of men, I fear, are not without them.

BLINDWORM. n. f. [cæcilia, from blind and worm.] A small viper, called likewise a flow worm; believed not to be venomous.

You spotted snakes, with double tongue,
Thorny hedgehogs, be not feen;

Newts and blindworms, do no wrong;

Come not near our fairy queen.

The greater flow worm, called also the blind-worm, is commonly thought to be blind, because of the littleness of his eyes.

To BLINK. v. n. [blincken, Danish.]

1. To wink, or twinkle with the eyes.

So pollick, as if one eye

Upon the other were a spy;

That to trepan the one to think

The other blind, both strove to blink.

2. To see obscurely.

What's here! the portrait of a blinking ideot.

Sweet and lovely wall

Shew me thy chink, to blink through with mine

eyne.

His figure such as might his soul proclaim;

One eye was blinking, and one leg was lame.

BLINKARD. n. f. [from blink.]

1. One that has bad eyes.

2. Something twinkling.

In some parts we see many glorious and eminent stars, in others few of any remarkable greatness, and, in some, none but blinkards, and obscure ones.

BLISS. n. f. [blisse, Sax. from blissarian, to rejoice.]

1. The highest degree of happiness; blessedness; felicity; generally used of the happiness of blessed souls.

A mighty Saviour hath witnessed of himself, I am the way; the way that leadeth us from misery into bliss.

Dim sadness did not spare

That time celestial viages; yet, mix'd

With pity, violat'd not their bliss.

With me

All my redeem'd may dwell, in joy and bliss.

2. Felicity in general.

Condition, circumstance is not the thing;

Bliss is the fame in subject or in king.

BLISSFUL. adj. [from bliss and full.] Full of joy; happy in the highest degree.

Yet swimming in that sea of blissful joy,

He nought forgot.

The two saddest ingredients in hell, are deprivation of the blissful vision, and confusion of face.

Reaping immortal fruits of joy and love,

Uninterrupted joy, unrivall'd love,

In blissful solitude.

So peaceful shalt thou end thy blissful days,

And steal thyself from life by slow decays.

First in the fields I try the sylvan strains,

Nor blush to sport in Windfor's blissful plains.

BLISSFULLY. adv. [from blissful.] Happily.

BLISSFULNESS. n. f. [from blissful.] Happiness; fulness of joy.

To BLISSOM. v. n. To caterwaul; to be lustful.

BLISTER. n. f. [blister, Dutch.]

1. A pustule formed by raising the cuticle from the cutis, and filled with ferous blood.

In this state she gallops, night by night,
O'er ladies lips, who strait on kisses dream,
Which oft the angry Mab with blisters plagues,
Because their breaths with sweetmeats tainted are.

I found a great blister drawn by the garlick, but had it cut, which run a good deal of water, but filled again by next night.

2. Any swelling made by the separation of a film or skin from the other parts.

Upon the leaves there riseth a tumour like a blister.

To BLISTER. v. n. [from the noun.] To rise in blisters.

If I prove honeymouth let my tongue blister,

And never to my red look'd anger be

The trumpet any more.

Embrace thy knees with loathing hands,

Which blister when they touch thee.

To BLISTER. v. a.

1. To raise blisters by some hurt, as by a burn, or rubbing.

Look, here comes one, a gentlewoman of mine,

Who falling in the flaws of her own youth,

Hath blister'd her report.

2. To raise blisters with a medical intention.

I blister'd the legs and thighs; but was too late;

he died howling.

BLITHE. adj. [blithe, Saxon.] Gay; airy; merry; joyous; sprightly; mirthful.

We have always one eye fixed upon the countenance of our enemies; and, according to the blithe or heavy aspect thereof, our other eye sheweth some other fuitable token either of dislike or approbation.

Then sigh not so, but let them go,

And be you blithe and bonny.

For that fair female troop thou saw'st, that seem'd

Of goddesses, so blithe, so smooth, so gay;

Yet empty of all good.

To whom the wily adder, blithe and glad:

Empress! the way is ready, and not long.

And the milkmaid singeth blithe,

And the mower whets his scythe.

Should he return, that troop to blithe and bold,

Precipitant in fear would wing their flight.

BLITHELY. adv. [from blithe.] in a blithe manner.

BLITHESS. } n. f. [from blithe.] The BLITHESSOMNESS. } quality of being blithe.

BLITHESSOME. adj. [from blithe.] Gay; cheerful.

Frosty blasts deface

The blithsome year: trees of their shrivell'd fruits

Are widow'd.

To BLOAT. v. a. [probably from blow.] To swell, or make turgid with wind: it has up, an intensive particle.

His rude essays

Encourage him, and bloat him up with praise,

That he may get more bulk before he dies.

The strutting petticoat smooths all distinctions, levels the mother with the daughter. I cannot but be troubled to see so many well-shaped innocent virgins bloated up, and waddling up and down like big bellied women.

To BLOAT. v. n. To grow turgid.

If a person of a firm constitution begins to bloat, from being warm grows cold, his fibres grow weak.

BLOAT. adj. Swell'd with intemperance; tur-gid.

The bloat king.

BLOATEDNESS. n. f. [from bloat.] Turgidness;

spots, are symptoms of weak fibres.

BLOBBY. n. f. [from blob.] A word used in some counties for a bubble.

There swimmeth also in the sea a round slimy substance, called a blobber, reputed noisome to the fish.

BLOBBY. n. f. [from blob, or blobber, and lip.] A thick lip.

They make a wit of their insipid friend,
His blobberlips, and beetlebrows commend.

BLOBLIPPED. } adj. Having swelled or

BLOBBY. } thick lips.

A blobberipped shell, seemeth to be a kind of mussel.

His person deformed to the highest degree; flat nosed, and blobberipped.

BLOCK, n. f. [block, Dutch; bloc, Fr.]

1. A heavy piece of timber, rather thick than long.

2. A mass of matter.

Homer's apotheosis consists of a groupe of figures, cut in the same block of marble, and rising

one above another.

3. A massy body.

Small causes are sufficient to make a man uneasy, when great ones are not in the way: for want of a block he will stumble at a straw.

4. A rude piece of matter; in contempt.

When, by the help of wedges and beetles, an image is cleft out of the trunk of some tree, yet, after all the skill of artificers to set forth such a divine block, it cannot one moment secure itself from being eaten by worms.

5. The piece of wood on which hats are formed. Some old writers use block for the hat itself.

He wears his faith but as the fashion of his hat;

it ever changes with the next block.

6. The wood on which criminals are beheaded.

Some guard these traitors to the block of death,

Treason's true bed, and yielder-up of breath.

At the instant of his death, having a long beard, after his head was upon the block, he gently drew his beard aside, and said, this hath not offended

the king.

I'll drag him thence,

Even from the holy altar to the block.

7. An obstruction; a stop.

Can he ever dream, that the suffering for righteousness fake is our felicity, when he sees us run to from it, that no crime is block enough in our way to stop our flight?

8. A sea term for a pulley.

9. A blockhead; a fellow remarkable for stupidity.

The country is a desert, where the good

Gain'd, inhabits not; born's not understood;

There men become beasts, and prone to all evils;

In cities, blocks.

What tongueless blocks were they, would they not speak?

To BLOCK. v. a. [bloquer, Fr.]

1. To shut up; to inclose, so as to hinder egress;

to obstruct.

The states about them should neither by en-crease of dominion, nor by blocking of trade, have it in their power to hurt or annoy.

They block the castle kept by Bertram;

But now they cry, down with the palace, fire it.

2. It has often up, to note closure.

Recommend it to the governor of Abingdon, to send some troops to block it up, from infesting the great road.

The abbot raises an army, and blocks up the town on the side that faces his dominions.

BLOCK-HOUSE. n. f. [from block and house.] A fortress built to obstruct or block up a pass, commonly to defend a harbour.

His entrance is guarded with block-houses, and that on the town's side fortified with ordnance.

covering it with ink.

You that are king
Have caus'd him by new act of parliament,
To blot out me, and put his own son in.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Ev'n copious Dryden wanted, or forgot.
The last and greatest art, the art to blot. Pope.

A man of the most understanding will find it impossible to make the best use of it, while he writes in constraint, perpetually softening, correcting, or blotting out expressions. Swift.

2. To efface; to erase.

O Bertram, oh! no more my foe, but brother:
One act like this blots out a thousand crimes. Dry.

These simple ideas, offered to the mind, the understanding can no more refuse, nor alter, nor blot out, than a mirror can refuse, alter, or obliterate, the images which the objects produce.

Locke.

3. To make black spots on a paper; to blur.

Heads overfull of matter, be like pens overfull of ink, which will sooner blot, than make any fair letter. Ascham.

O sweet Portia!
Hear are a few of the unpleasantest words
That ever blotted paper. Shaksf. Merch. of Venice.

4. To disgrace; to disfigure.

Unkitt that threaten'g unkind brow;
It blots thy beauty, as frost bites the meads, Confounds thy fame. Shaksf. Taming of the Shrew.

My guilt thy growing virtues did defame;
My blackness blotted thy unblemish'd name.

Dryden's Aeneid.

For mercy's sake, restrain thy hand,
Blot not thy innocence with guiltless blood. Rowe.

a spirit void of all sensible qualities, and bodily dimensions? South.

2. Relating to the body, not the mind.

Of such as resort to our Saviour Christ, being present on earth, there came not any unto him with better success, for the benefit of their souls everlasting happiness, than they whose bodily necessities gave occasion of seeking relief. Hooker.

Virtue atones for bodily defects; beauty is nothing worth, without a mind. L'Estrange.

As clearness of the bodily eye doth dispose it for a quicker sight; so doth freedom from lust and passion, dispose us for the most perfect acts of reason. Tillotson.

I would not have children much beaten for their faults, because I would not have them think bodily pain the greatest punishment. Locke.

3. Real; actual.

This coffee-room is much frequented; and there are generally several pots and boilers before the fire. Woodward.

BO'ISTEROUS. adj. [byster, furious, Dutch.]

1. Violent; loud; roaring; stormy.
By a divine instinct, mens minds mistrust Ensuing danger; as by proof we see
The waters swell before a boisterous storm. Shakespeare.

As when loud winds a well-grown oak would rend
Up by the roots, this way and that they bend
His reeling trunk, and with a boist'rous sound Scatter his leaves, and strew them on the ground. Waller.

2. Turbulent; tumultuous; furious.
Spirit of peace,
Wherefore do you so ill translate yourself
Out of the speech of peace, that bears such grace,
Into the harsh and boist'rous tongue of war? Shakes.

His sweetness won a more regard Unto his place, than all the boist'rous moods
That ignorant greatness practiseth. Ben Jonson.

God, into the hands of their deliverer,
Puts invincible might,
To quell the mighty of the earth, th' oppressor,
The brute and boist'rous force of violent men. Milton.

Still must I beg thee not to name Sempronius;
Lucia, I like not that loud boist'rous man. Addison.

3. Unwieldy; clumsily violent.
His boisterous club, so buried in the ground,
He could not rearen up again so light,
But that the knight him at advantage found. Fairy Queen.

and cause it to stand off to sight. Dryden.

7. Open; smooth; even; level: a sailor's term.
Her dominions have bold accessible coasts. Howel.

8. To make bold. To take freedoms: a phrase not grammatical, though common. To be bold is better; as, I was bold to tell the house that scandalous livings make scandalous ministers. Rudgerd.

I have made bold to send to your wife;
My suit is, that she will to Desdemona Procure me some access. Shakespeare.

Making so bold,
My fears forgetting manners, to unseal
Their grand commission. Shakespeare.

And were y' as good as George a Green,
I shall make bold to turn agen. Hudibras.

I durst not make thus bold with Ovid, lest some future Milburn should arise. Dryden.

Some men have the fortune to be esteemed wits, only for making bold to scoff at these things, which the greatest part of mankind reverence. Tillotson.

To BO'LDEN. v. a. [from bold.] To make bold;
to give confidence.

Quick inventors, and fair ready speakers, being boldened with their present abilities, to say more, and perchance better too, at the sudden, for that present, than any other can do, use less help of diligence and study. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

I am much too vent'rous,
In tempting of your patience, but am bolden'd
Under your promis'd pardon. Shakespeare.

BO'LDEN. v. a. [from bold.] To make bold;
to give confidence.

BOL

BOLDFACE. n. f. [from bold and face.] Impudence; sauciness: a term of reproach and reprehension.

How, now, boldface! cries an old trof; sirrah, we eat our own hens, I'd have you know; what you eat, you steal. L'Estrange.

BOLD FACED. adj. [from bold and face.] Impudent.

I have seen those fillicst of creatures; and, seeing their rare works, I have seen enough to confute all the boldfaced atheifts of this age.

Bramhall against Hobbes.

BOLDLY. adv. [from bold.]

1. In a bold manner; with courage; with spirit. Thus we may boldly speak, being strengthened with the example of so reverend a prelate. Hooker.

I speak to subjects, and a subject speaks, stir'd up by heav'n, thus boldly for his king.

Shakespeare.

BOLTSPLIT. n. f. A mast running out at the head of a ship, not standing upright, but aslope. The but end of it is generally set against the foot of the foremast; so that they are a stay to one another. The length without board is sufficient to let its sails hang clear of all incumbrances. If the bolsprit fail in bad weather, the foremast cannot hold long after. Bowsprit is perhaps the right spelling. Sea Dict.

in,

Sometimes I'd divide,
And burn in many places; on the topmast,
The yards, and bolsprit, would I flame distinctly.

Shakespeare.
BO'LUS. n. f. [bolus, Gr.] A form of medicine, in which the ingredients are made up into a soft mass, larger than pills, to be swallowed at once. Keep their bodies soluble the while by clysters, lenitive boluses of cassia and manna, with syrup of violets. Wifeman.

By poets we are well assur'd,
That love, alas! can ne'er be cur'd;
A complicated heap of ills,
Despising boluses and pills. Swift.
BOMB. n. f. [bombus, Lat.]

1. A loud noise.
An upper chamber being thought weak, was supported by a pillar of iron, of the bigness of one's arm in the midst; which, if you had struck, would make a little flat noise in the room, but a great bomb in the chamber beneath. Bacon.

2. A hollow iron ball, or shell, filled with gunpowder, and furnished with a vent for a fusee, or wooden tube, filled with combustible matter, to be thrown out from a mortar, which had its name from the noise it makes. The fusee, being set on fire, burns slowly till it reach the gunpowder, which goes off at once, bursting the shell to pieces with incredible violence; whence the use of bombs in besieging towns. The largest are about eighteen inches in diameter. By whom they were invented is not known, and the time is uncertain, some fixing it to 1588, and others to 1495. Chambers.

The loud cannon missive iron pours,
And in the slaughter ring bomb Gradivus roars. Rome.
To BOMB. v. a. [from the noun.] To fall upon with bombs; to bombard.

Our king thus trembles at Namur, Whilst Villeroi, who ne'er afraid is,
To Bruxelles marches on secure,

To bomb the monks, and scarce the ladies. Prior.
BOMB-CHEST. n. f. [from bomb and chest.] A kind of chest filled usually with bombs, and sometimes only with gunpowder, placed under ground, to tear and blow it up in the air, with those who stand on it. Chambers.

BOMB-KETCH. n. f. A kind of ship, strongly BOMB-VESSEL. f. built, to bear the shock of a mortar, when bombs are to be fired into a town. Nor could an ordinary fleet, with bomb-vessels, hope to succeed against a place that has in its arsenal galleys and men of war. Addison on Italy.

BO'MBARD. n. f. [bombardus, Latin.]
1. A great gun; a cannon: it is a word now obsolete.

They planted in divers places twelve great bombards, wherewith they threw huge stones into the air, which, falling down into the city, might break down the houses. Knolles.

2. A barrel. Obsolete.
To BOMBARD. v. a. [from the noun.] To attack with bombs.

A medal is struck on the English failing in their attempts on Dunkirk, when they endeavoured to blow up a fort, and bombard the town. Addison.

BOMBARDIER. n. f. [from bombard.] The engineer whose employment it is to fire bombs.

The bombardier tosses his ball sometimes into the midst of a city, with a design to fill all around him with terror and combustion. Tatler.

BOMBARDMENT. n. f. [from bombard.] An attack made upon any city, by throwing bombs into it.

Genoa is not yet secure from a bombardment, though it is not so exposed as formerly. Addison.

BO'MBASIN. n. f. [bombasin, Fr. from bombus, silken, Lat.] A slight sicken stuff for mourning.

BO'MBAST. n. f. [A stuff of soft loose texture used formerly to swell the garment, and thence used to signify bulk or shew without solidity.] Fustian; big words, without meaning.

Not pedants motley tongue, soldiers bombast, Mountebanks drug-tongue, nor the terms of law, Are strong enough preparatives to draw Me to hear this. Donne.

Are all the flights of heroick poetry to be concluded bombast, unnatural, and mere madness, because they are not affected with their excellencies? Dryden.

BO'MBAST. adj. [from the substantive.] High founding; of big sound without meaning.

He, as loving his own pride and purpose, Evades them with a bombast circumstance, Horribly stuff'd with epithets of war. Shakespeare.

BOMBILATION. n. f. [from bombus, Lat.] Sound; noise; report.

How to abate the vigour, or silence the bombilation of guns, a way is said to be by borax and butter, mixt in a due proportion, which will almost take off the report, and also the force of the charge. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

BOMBICINOUS. adj. [bombicinus, Lat.] Silken; made of silk.

BONA ROBA. n. f. [Ital. a fine gown.] A shewy wanton.

O blessed bond of board and bed! Shakespeare.

Love cools, brothers divide, and the bond is cracked 'twixt son and father. Shakespeare. King Lear.

6. A writing of obligation to pay a sum, or perform a contract.

Go with me to a notary, seal me there Your single bond. Shakespeare.

What if I ne'er consent to make you mine;
My father's promise ties me not to time;
And bonds, without a date, they say, are void. Dryden.

7. Obligation; law by which any man is obliged.

Unhappy that I am! I cannot heave
My heart into my mouth: I love your majesty
According to my bond, no more nor less. Shakespeare.

Take which you please, it dissolves the bonds of government and obedience. Locke.

BOND. adj. [from bind, perhaps for bound; from gebonden, Saxon.] Captive; in a servile state.

Whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free. 1 Cor. xii. 13.

BONDAGE. n. f. [from bond.]

1. Captivity; imprisonment; state of restraint. You only have overthrown me, and in my bondage confits my glory. Sidney.

Say, gentle prince, would you not suppose Your bondage happy, to be made a queen? —To be a queen in bondage, is more vile Than is a slave in base servility. Shakespeare.

Our cage
We make a choir, as doth the prison'd bird,
And sing our bondage freely. Shakespeare. Cymbeline.

The king, when he design'd you for my guard,
Resolv'd he would not make my bondage hard. Dryden.

2. Obligation; tie of duty.
If she has a struggle for honour, she is in a bondage to love; which gives the story its turn that way. Pope.

He must resolve by no means to be enslaved, and brought under the bondage of observing oath, which ought to vanish when they stand in competition with eating and drinking, or taking money. South.

BO'NDMAID. n. f. [from bond, captive, and maid.] A woman slave.

Good sister, wrong me not, nor wrong yourself,
To make a bondmaid and a slave of me. Shakespeare.

BO'NDMAN. n. f. [from bond and man.] A man slave.

Amongst the Romans, in making of a bondman free, was it not wondered wherefore so great ado should be made? the matter to present his slave in some court, to take him by the hand, and not only to say, in the hearing of the publick magistrate, I will that this man become free; but, after those solemn words uttered, to strike him on the cheek, to turn him round, the hair of his head to be shaved off, the magistrate to touch him thrice with a rod; in the end, a cap and a white garment given him. Hooker.

O freedom! first delight of human kind;
Not that which bondmen from their masters find. Dryden.

BONDSE'RVANT. n. f. [from bond and servant.] A slave; a servant without the liberty of quitting his master.

And if thy brother, that dwelleth by thee, be waxen poor, and be sold unto thee, thou shalt not compel him to serve as a bondservant. Leviticus, xxv. 39.

2. A person bound, or giving security for another.

BO'NDSWOMAN. n. f. [from bond and woman.] A woman slave.

My lords, the senators
Are sold for slaves, and their wives for bondswomen. Ben Jonson's Catiline.

BONE. n. f. [ban, Saxon.]

1. The solid parts of the body of an animal made up of hard fibres, tied one to another by small transverse fibres, as those of the muscles. In a fetus they are porous, soft, and easily discerned. As their pores fill with a substance of their own nature, so they increase, harden, and grow close to one another. They are all spongy, and full of little cells, or are of a considerable firm firm thickness, with a large cavity, except the teeth; and where they are articulated, they are covered with a thin and strong membrane, called the periosteum. Each bone is much bigger at its extremity than in the middle, that the articulations might be firm, and the bones not easily put out of joint. But, because the middle of the bone should be strong, to sustain its allotted weight, and resist accidents, the fibres are there more closely compacted together, supporting one another; and the bone is made hollow, and consequently not so easily broken, as it must have been had it been solid and smaller.

Thy bones are marrowless, thy blood is cold.

There was lately a young gentleman bit to the bone.

2. A fragment of meat; a bone with as much flesh as adheres to it.

Like Æsop's hounds, contending for the bone, Each pleaded right, and would he lord alone.

3. To be upon the bones, To attack.

Puffs had a month's mind to be upon the bones of him, but was not willing to pick a quarrel.

4. To make no bones. To make no scruple: a metaphor taken from a dog, who readily swallows meat that has no bones.

5. Bones. A sort of bobbins, made of trotter bones, for weaving bonelace.

6. Bones. Dice. But then my study was to cog the dice, And dextrously to throw the lucky dice: To shun ames ace that swept my stakes away; And watch the box, for fear they should convey False bones, and put upon me in the play. Dryden.

To BONE. v. a. [from the noun.] To take out the bones from the flesh; as, the cooks boned the veal.

Bo'NELACE. n. f. [from bone and lace; the bobbins with which lace is woven being frequently made of bones.] Flaxen lace, such as women wear on their linen.

The things you follow, and make songs on now, should be sent to knit, or sit down to bobbins or bonelace.

We destroy the symmetry of the human figure, and foolishly contrive to call off the eye from great and real beauties, to childish gewgaw ribbands and bonelace.

Bo'NELESS. adj. [from bone.] Wanting bones. I would, while it was smiling in my face, Have plucked my nipple from his boneless gums, And dash't the brains out.

To Bo'NESET. v. n. [from bone and set.] To restore a bone out of joint to its place; or join a bone broken to the other part.

A fractured leg set in the country by one pretending to bonsetting.

Bo'NESETTER. n. f. [from bonset.] A surgeon; one who particularly professes the art of restoring broken or luxated bones.

At present my desire is to have a good bonsetter.

Bo'NFIRE. n. f. [from bon, good, Fr. and fire.] A fire made for some publick cause of triumph or exultation.

Ring ye the bells to make it wear away, And bonfires make all day.

How came so many bonfires to made in queen Mary's days? Why, she had abused and deceived her people.

Full soon by bonfire, and by bell, We learnt our liege was passing well.

Bo'NGRACE. n. f. [from bonne grace, Fr.] A forehead-cloth, or covering for the forehead. Not now used.

I have seen her beset all over with emeralds, and pearls, ranged in rows about her cawl, her peruke, her bongrace, and chaplet.

Bo'NNET. n. f. [from bonet, Fr.] A covering for the head; a hat; a cap.

Go to them with this bonnet in thy hand, And thus far having stretch'd it, here be with them,

Thy knee buffing the stones; for, in such buffings,

Action is eloquence. Shakespeare's Coriolanus. They had not probably the ceremony of vailing the bonnet in their salutations; for, in medals, they still have it on their heads.

Bo'NNET. [In fortification.] A kind of little ravelin, without any ditch, having a parapet three feet high, anciently placed before the points of the salient angles of the glacis.

Bo'NNET à pretre, or priest's cap, is an outwork, having at the head three salient angles, and two inwards.

Bo'NNETS. [In the sea language.] Small sails set on the courses on the mizzen, mainmast, and foresail of a ship, when these are too narrow or shallow to cloath the mast, or in order to make more way in calm weather.

Bo'NNILY. adv. [from bonny.] Gayly; handsomely; plumply.

Bo'NNINESS. n. f. [from bonny.] Gayety; handsomeness; plumpness.

BO'NNY. adj. [from bon, bonne, Fr.] It is a word now almost confined to the Scottish dialect.

1. Handsome; beautiful.

to the breast.
2. The breast ; the heart.
Our good old friend,
Lay comforts to your bosom ; and bestow
Your needful counsel to our business. Shakespeare.
3. The folds of the dress that cover the breast.
Put now thy hand into thy bosom ; and he put his hand into his bosom : and when he took it out, behold his hand was leprous as snow. Exod. iv. 6.
4. Inclosure ; compass ; embrace.
Unto laws thus received by a whole church,
they which live within the bosom of that church, must not think it a matter indifferent, either to yield, or not to yield, obedience. Hooker.
5. The breast, as the seat of the passions.
Anger resteth in the bosom of fools. Ecclef.
From jealousy's tormenting strife
For ever be thy bosom freed. Prior.
Unfortunate Tallard ! O, who can name
The pangs of rage, of sorrow, and of shame ;
That with mix'd tumult in thy bosom swell'd,
When first thou saw thy bravest troops repell'd !
Addison.
Here acting bosoms wear a visage gay,
And stifled groans frequent the ball and play. Young.
6. The breast, as the seat of tenderness.
Their soul was poured out into their mother's bosom. Lamentations.

O Son, in whom my soul hath chief delight ;
Son of my bosom, Son who art alone
My word, my wisdom, and effectual might !
Paradise Lost.
10. Inclination ; desire. Not used.
If you can pace your wisdom
In that good path that I could wish it go,
You shall have your bosom on this wretch. Shakespeare.
BOSOM, in composition, implies intimacy ;
confidence ; fondness.
No more that thane of Cawdor shall deceive
Our bosom interest ; go, pronounce his death. Shak.
This Antonio,
Being the bosom-lover of my lord,
Must needs belike my lord. Shakespeare.
Those domestick traitors, bosom-thieves,
Whom custom hath call'd wives : the readiest helps
To betray the heady husbands, rob the easy.
Ben Jonson.
He sent for his bosom-friends, with whom he most confidently consulted, and shewed the paper to them ; the contents whereof he could not conceive. Clarendon.
The fourth privilege of friendship is that which is here specified in the text, a communication of secrets. A bosom-secret, and a bosom-friend, are usually put together. South.
She who was a bosom-friend of her royal mistress,
he calls an insolent woman, the worst of her sex. Addison.

4. A dale; a valley; a low ground.
In the purlieu stands a sheep-cote,
West of this place; down in the neighbour bottom. Shakespeare.

On both the shores of that fruitful bottom, are still to be seen the marks of ancient edifices.

Equal convexity could never be seen: the inhabitants of such an earth could only have the prospect of a little circular plain, which would appear to have an acclivity on all sides; so that every man would fancy himself the lowest, and that he always dwelt and moved in a bottom. Bentley.

5. The part most remote from the view; the deepest part.
His proposals and arguments should with freedom be examined to the bottom, that, if there be any mistake in them, no body may be misled by

BO'TTOMLESS. adj. [from bottom.] Without a bottom; fathomless.

Wickedness may well be compared to a bottomless pit, into which it is easier to keep one's self from falling, than being fallen to give one's self any stay from falling infinitely. Sidney.

Is not my sorrow deep, having no bottom?
Then be my passions bottomless with them. Shakespeare.

Him the Almighty pow'r
Hurl'd headlong, flaming from th' etherial sky,
To bottomless perdition. Milton.

BO'TTOMRY. n. f. [in navigation and commerce.] The act of borrowing money on a ship's bottom; that is, by engaging the vessel for the repayment of it, so as that, if the ship miscarry, the lender loses the money advanced; but if it arrives safe at the end of the voyage, he is to repay the money lent, with a certain premium or interest agreed on;
and this on pain of forfeiting the ship. Harris.

BOX. n. f. [box, Saxon; buxus, Lat.] A tree.
The leaves are pennated, and evergreen; it hath male flowers, that are produced at remote distances from the fruit, on the same tree; the fruit is shaped like a porridge-pot, inverted, and is divided into three cells, containing two seeds in each, which, when ripe, are cast forth by the elasticity of the vessels. The wood is very useful for engravers, and mathematical instrument-makers;
being so hard, close, and ponderous, as to sink
in water. Miller.

Box, there are two sorts of it; the dwarf box, and a taller sort. The dwarf box is very good for borders, and is easily kept in order, with one clipping in the year. It will increase of slips set in March, or about Bartholomew tide, and will prosper on the declivity of cold, dry, barren, chalky hills, where nothing else will grow. Moutier.

Box. n. f. [box, Sax. bux, Germ.]

1. A case made of wood, or other matter, to hold any thing. It is distinguished from chest, as the box is from the greater. It is supposed to have its name from the box wood.

BOY. n. f. [bub, Germ. The etymology is not agreed on.]

1. A male child; not a girl.

The streets of the city shall be full of boys and girls playing. Zech.

2. One in the state of adolescence; older than an infant, yet not arrived at puberty or manhood.

Speak thou, boy;

Perhaps thy childishness will move him more

Than can our reasons. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Sometimes forgotten things, long cast behind,
Rush forward in the brain, and come to mind:

The nurse's legends are for truths receiv'd,
And the man dreams but what the boy believ'd.

Dryden.

3. A word of contempt for young men, as noting their immaturity.

Men of worth and parts will not easily admit the familiarity of boys, who yet need the care of a tutor. Locke.

The pale boy senator yet tingling stands,
And holds his breeches close with both his hands.

Pope.

To BOY. v. n. [from the noun.] To treat as a boy.

Anthony

Shall be brought drunken forth, and I shall see

Some squeaking Cleopatra boy my greatness,

I th' posture of a whore. Shakespeare.

BOYHOOD. n. f. [from boy.] The state of a boy; the part of life in which we are boys. This is perhaps an arbitrary word.

If you should look at him, in his boyhood, through the magnifying end of a perspective, and, in his manhood, through the other, it would be impossible to spy any difference; the same air, the same strut. Swift.

BOYISH. adj. [from boy.]

1. Belonging to a boy.

I ran it through, e'en from my boyish days,

To th' very moment that he bade me tell it.

Shakespeare.

2. Childish; trifling.

This unhair'd fauciness and boyish troops,

The king doth smile at, and is well prepar'd

To whip this dwarfish war, these pigmy arms.

Shakespeare.

Young men take up some English poet for their model, and imitate him, without knowing where in he is defective, where he is boyish and trifling. Dryden.

BOYISHLY. adv. [from boyish.] Childishly; triflingly.

BOYISHNESS. n. f. [from boyish.] Childishness; trifling manner.

BOYISM. n. f. [from boy.] Puerility; childishness.

He had complained he was farther off, by being so near, and a thousand such boyisms, which Chaucer rejected as below the subject. Dryden.

The women of China, by bracing and binding them from their infancy, have very little feet. Locke.

2. To intend; to make tense; to strain up.

The tympanum is not capable of tension that way, in such a manner as a drum is braced. Holder.

The diminution of the force of the pressure of the external air, in bracing the fibres, must create a debility in muscular motion. Arbutnot on Air.

BRACE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Cincture; bandage.

2. That which holds any thing tight.

The little bones of the ear-drum do in straining and relaxing it, as the braces of the war-drum do in that. Derham.

3. BRACE. [In architecture.] Is a piece of timber framed in with bevil joints, used to keep the building from swerving either way. Build. Dict.

4. BRACES. [A feather.] Ropes belonging to all the yards, except the mizen. They have a pendant to the yard-arm, two braces to each yard; and, at the end of the pendant, a block is seized, through which the rope called the brace is reeved. The braces serve to square and traverse the yards. Sea Dict.

5. BRACES of a Coach. Thick straps of leather on which it hangs.

6. Harness.

7. BRACE. [In printing.] A crooked line inclosing a passage, which ought to be taken together, and not separately; as in a triplet.

Charge Venus to command her son,
Where ever else she lets him rove,
To shun my house, and field, and grove; }
Peace cannot dwell with hate or love. } Prior.

8. Warlike preparation; from bracing the armour; as we say, girded for the battle.

As it more concerns the Turk than Rhodes,
So may he with more facile question bear it;

For that it stands not in such warlike brace,

But altogether lacks th' abilities

That Rhodes is dress'd in. Shakespeare.

9. Tension; tightness.

The most frequent cause of deafness is the laxness of the tympanum, when it has lost its brace or tension. Holder.

BRACE. n. f. [of uncertain etymology, probably derived from two braced together.]

1. A pair; a couple. It is not braces, but brace, in the plural.

Down from a hill the beasts that reign in woods,
First hunter then, pursu'd a gentle brace,
Godliest of all the forest, hart and hind.

Paradise Lost.

Ten brace and more of greyhounds, snowy fair,
And tall as stags, ran loose, and cours'd around his chair.

Dryden's Fables.

2. It is used generally in conversation as a sportsman's word.

He is said, this summer, to have shot with his own hands fifty brace of pheasants. Addison.

3. It is applied to men in contempt.

But you, my brace of lords, were I so minded,
I here could pluck his highness' frown upon you.

Shakespeare.

Truth's a dog must to kennel; he must be whipped out, when the lady brach may stand by the fire, and flink. Shakespeare.

BRACHIAL. adj. [from brachium, an arm, Lat.] Belonging to the arm.

BRACHYGRAPHY. n. f. [brachy, short, and graphein, to write.] The art or practice of writing in a short compass.

All the certainty of those high pretenders, bat-

ing what they have of the first principles, and the word of God, may be circumscribed by as small a circle as the creed, when brachygraphy had confined it within the compass of a penny. Graville.

BRACK. n. f. [from break.] A breach; a broken part.

The place was but weak, and the bracks fair; but the defendants, by resolution, supplied all the defects. Hayward.

Let them compare my work with what is taught in the schools, and if they find in theirs many bracks and short ends, which cannot be spun into an even piece, and, in mine, a fair coherence throughout, I shall promise myself an acquiescence. Digby.

BRACKET. n. f. [a term of carpentry.] A piece of wood fixed for the support of something.

Let your shelves be laid upon brackets, being about two feet wide, and edged with a small lath. Motimer.

BRACKISH. adj. [brack, Dutch.] Salt; somewhat salt; it is used particularly of the water of the sea.

Pits upon the sea shore turn into fesh water, by percolation of the salt through the sand: but it is farther noted, after a time, the water in such pits will become brackish again. Bacon.

When I had ga'n'd the brow and top,
A lake of brackish waters on the ground,
Was all I found. Herbert.

The wife contriver, on his end intent,
Mix'd them with salt, and season'd all the sea.

What other cause could this effect produce?
The brackish tincture through the main diffuse?

Blackmore.

BRACKISHNESS. n. f. [from brackish.] Saltiness in a small degree.

All the artificial strainings, hitherto leave a brackishness in salt water, that make it unfit for animal uses. Cheyne.

BRAD. being an initial, signifies broad, spacious, from the Saxon brad, and the Gothic, brad. Gibson.

BRAD. n. f. A sort of nail to floor rooms with. They are about the size of a tenpenny nail, but have not their heads made with a shoulder over their shank, as other nails, but are made pretty thick towards the upper end, that the very top may be driven into, and buried in the board they nail down; so that the tops of these brads will not catch the thrums of the mops, when the floor is washing. Moxm.

To BRAG. v. n. [braggaren, Dutch.]

1. To boast; to display ostentatiously; to tell boastful stories.

Thou coward! art thou bragging to the stars?
Telling the bushes that thou look'st for wars,
And wilt not come. Shakespeare.

Mark me, with what violence the first loved the Moor, but for bragging and telling her fantastical lies. Shakespeare.

In bragging out some of their private tenets, as if they were the established doctrine of the church of England. Sanderfon.

The rebels were grown so strong there, that they intended then, as they already bragged, to come over and make this the seat of war. Clarendon.

Mrs. Bull's condition was looked upon as desperate by all the men of art; but there were those that bragged they had an infallible ointment. Arbutnot.

2. It has of before the thing boasted.

Knowledge being the only thing wherof we poor old men can brag, we cannot make it known but by utterance. Sidney.

Verona brags of him,
To be a virtuous and well-govern'd youth. Shakespeare.

Ev'ry busy little scribbler now
Swells with the praises which he gives himself,
And taking sanctuary in the crowd,
Brags of his impudence, and scorns to mend.

Reformers.

3. On is used, but improperly.

Yet lo! in me what authors have to brag on,
Reduc'd at last to hiss in my own dragon. Pope.

BRAG.

BRAG. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A boast; a proud expression.

A kind of conquest

Cæsar made here; but made not here his brag
Of came, and saw, and overcame. Shakespeare.
It was such a new thing for the Spaniards to receive so little hurt, upon dealing with the English, as Avellaneda made great brags of it, for no greater matter than the waiting upon the English afar off. Bacon.

2. The thing boasted.

Beauty is nature's brag, and must be shewn
In courts, at feasts, and high solemnities,
Where most may wonder. Milton.
BRAGGADOCCIO. n. f. [from brag.] A puffing, swelling, boasting fellow.

The world abounds in terrible fanfarones, in the masque of men of honour; but these braggadocios are easy to be detected. L'Estrange.

By the plot, you may guess much of the characters of the persons; a braggadocio captain, a parasite, and a lady of pleasure. Dryden.

BRAGGARDISM. n. f. [from brag.] Boastful-ness; vain ostentation.

BRAGGART. adj. [from brag.] Boastful; vainly ostentatious.

Shall I, none's slave, of high born or rais'd men
Fear frowns; and my mistress, truth, betray thee
To th' hating braggart, puff nobility? Donne.

BRAGGART. n. f. [from brag.] A boaster.
Who knows himself a braggart,

Let him fear this; for it will come to pass,
That every braggart shall be found an ass. Shaksp.
BRAGGER. n. f. [from brag.] A boaster; an ostentatious fellow.

Such as have had opportunity to sound these braggers thoroughly, by having sometimes endured the pittance of their sottish company, have found them, in converse, empty and insipid. South.

BRAGLESS. adj. [from brag.] Without a boast;
without ostentation.

The bruit is, Hector's slain, and by Achilles.—
If it is so, braggle let it be,
Great Hector was as good a man as he. Shaksp.
BRAGGLY. adv. [from brag.] Finely; so as it may be bragged.

Seest not thilk hawthorn stud,
How braggly it begins to bud,
And utter his tender head?
Flora now calleth forth each flower,
And bids make ready Maia's bower. Spenser.
To BRAID. v. a. [from brædan, Saxon.] To weave together.

Close the serpent fly,
Insinuating, wove with gordian twine
His braided train, and of his fatal guile Gave proof unheeded. Milton.
O'er wands, lying loosely, may each of them be easily dissociated from the rest; but when braided into a basket, they cohere strongly. Boyle.

A ribband did the braided tresses bind,
The rest was loose, and wanton'd in the wind.
Dryden.

Since in braided gold her foot is bound,
And a long trailing manteau sweeps the ground,
Her shoe disdains the street. Gay.
BRAID. n. f. [from the verb.] A texture; a knot, or complication of something woven together.

Listen where thou art fitting,
Under the glossy, cool, translucent wave,
In twisted braids of lilies knitting
The loose train of thy amber-dropping hair. Milton.

No longer shall thy comely traces break
In flowing ringlets on thy snowy neck,
Or fit behind thy head, an ample round,
In graceful braids, with various ribbon bound. Prior.

BRAID. adj. [To brede, in Chaucer, is to deceive.]
An old word, which seems to signify deceitful.
Since Frenchmen are so braided,

Marry 'em that will. I'll live and die a maid.
Shaksp.

BRAILS. n. f. [Sea term.] Small ropes reeved through blocks, which are seized on either side the ries, a little off upon the yard; so that they come down before the sails of a ship, and are fastened at the skirt of the sail to the cringles. Their use is when the sail is to be furled, to haul up its bunt, that it may the more readily be taken in or let fall.

Harris.

BRAIN. n. f. [from brægen, Sax. breyn, Dutch.]
1. That collection of vessels and organs in the head, from which sense and motion arise.

The brain is divided into cerebrum and cerebellum.
Cerebrum is that part of the brain which possesses all the upper and forepart of the cranium, being separated from the cerebellum by the second process of the dura mater, under which the cerebellum is situated. The substance of the brain is distinguished into outer and inner; the former is called cortica- lis, cinerea, or glandularis; the latter, medullaris, alba, or nervea. Chefelden.

If I be served such another trick, I'll have my brains ta'en out, and buttered, and give them to a dog for a new year's gift.

Shaksp.'s Merry Wives of Windsor.
That man proportionably hath the largest brain,
I did, I confess, somewhat doubt, and conceived it might have failed in birds, especially such as having little bodies, have yet large craniums, and seem to contain much brain, as snipes and woodcocks;
but, upon trial, I find it very true.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.
2. That part in which the understanding is placed; therefore taken for the understanding.

The force they are under is a real force, and
and that of their fate but an imaginary conceived one; the one but in their brains, the other on their shoulders. Hammond.

A man is first a geometrician in his brain, before he be such in his hand. Hale.

3. Sometimes the affections: this is not common, nor proper.

My son Edgar! had he a hand to write this, a heart and brain to breed it in? Shaksp.
To BRAIN. v. a. [from the noun.] To dash out the brains; to kill by beating out the brains.

Why, as I told thee, 'tis a custom with him i'
th' afternoon to sleep; there thou may'st brain
him. Shaksp.

Outlaws of nature,
Fit to be shot and brain'd, without a process,
To stop infection; that's their proper death. Dryden.

Next feiz'd two wretches more, and headlong cast,

Brain'd on the rock, his second dire repast. Pope.
BRAINISH. adj. [from brain.] Hotheaded; furious; as cerebrosus in Latin.

In his lawless fit,
Behind the arras hearing something stir,
He whips his rapier out, and cries, a rat!
And, in his brainish apprehension, kills
The unseen good old man. Shaksp.

BRAINLESS. adj. [from brain.] Silly; thoughtless; witless.

Some brainless men have, by great travel and labour, brought to pass, that the church is now ashamed of nothing more than of saints. Hooker.

If the dull brainless Ajax come safe off,
We'll dress him up in voices. Shaksp.

The brainless stripling, who, expell'd the town,
Damn'd the stiff college, and pedantic gown,
Aw'd by thy name, is dumb. Tickell.

BRAINPAN. n. f. [from brain and pan.] The skull containing the brains.

With those huge bellows in his hands, he blows
New fire into my head: my brainpan glows. Dryd.

BRAINSTICK. adj. [from brain and stick.] Diseased in the understanding; addleheaded; giddy;
thoughtless.

Nor once deject the courage of our minds,
Because Cassandra's mad; her brainstick raptures Cannot displace the goodnes of a quarrel. Shaksp.

They were brainstick men, who could neither endure the government of their king, nor yet thankfully receive the authours of their deliverance. Knotles.

BRAINSLICKLY. adv. [from brainstick.] Weakly;
headily.

Why, worthy thou,
You do unbend your noble strength to think
So brainlessly of things. Shaksp.
BRAINSLICKNESS. n. f. [from brainstick.] Indifference; giddiness.

BRAIT. n. f. Among jewellers for a rough diamond. Di.

BRAKE. The preterite of break.
He thought it sufficient to correct the multitude with sharp words, and brake out into this choleric speech. Knotles.

BRAKE. n. f. [of uncertain etymology.]
1. A thicket of brambles, or of thorns.

A dog of this town used daily to fetch meat, and to carry the same unto a blind mastiff, that lay in a brake without the town. Carver.

If I'm traduc'd by tongues, which neither
know

My faculties nor person; let me say,
'Tis but the fate of place, and the rough brake
That virtue must go through. Shaksp.

In every bush and brake, where hap may find
The serpent sleeping. Milton.

Full little thought of him the gentle knight,
Who, flying death, had there conceal'd his flight;
In brakes and brambles hid, and shunning mortal sight. Drayton's Fables.

2. It is said originally to mean fern.

BRAKE. n. f.
1. An instrument for dressing hemp or flax.

2. The handle of a ship's pump.

3. A baker's kneading trough.

4. A sharp bit or snaffle for horses.

A smith's brake is a machine in which horses, unwilling to be shod, are confined during that operation. Di.

BRAKY. adj. [from brake.] Thorny; prickly; rough.

Redeem arts from their rough and braky seats, where they lie hid and overgrown with thorns, to a pure, open light, where they may take the eye, and may be taken by the hand. Ben Jonson.

BRA'MBLE. n. f. [from brēmlar, Sax. rubus, Lat.]
1. The blackberry bush; the raspberry bush, or hindberry. Miles.

2. It is taken, in popular language, for any rough prickly shrub.

The bush my bed, the bramble was my bow'r,
The woods can witness many a woful store. Spenser.

There is a man haunts the forest, that abuses our young plants with carving Rosalind on their barks; hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies on brambles; all, forsooth, deifying the name of Rosalind. Shaksp.

Content with food, which nature freely bred,
On wildings and on strawberries they fed:
Cornels and bramble berries gave the rest,
And falling acorns furnish'd out a feast. Dryden.

Thy younglings, Cuddy, are but just awake,
No thrushes thrill the bramble bush forsake. Gay.

BRA'MBLING. n. f. A bird, called also a man- tain chaffinch. Di.

BRAN. n. f. [from brann, Ital.] The husks of corn ground; the refuse of the sieve.

From me do back receive the flow'r of all,
And leave me but the bran. Shaksp.

The citizens were driven to great distresses for want of victuals; bread they made of the coarsest bran, moulded in cloaths; for otherwise it would not cleave together. Hayward.

In the sifting of fourteen years of power and favour, all that came out, could not be pure meal, but must have, among it, a certain mixture of padar and bran, in this lower age of human fragility. Watson.

Then water him, and drinking what he can,
Encourage him to thirst again with bran. Dryd.

BRANCH. n. f. [from branc, French.]

1. The shoot of a tree from one of the main boughs.

Why grow the branches, when the root is gone?
Why wither not the leaves that want their sap?
Shaksp.

2. Any member or part of the whole; any distinct article; any section or subdivision.

Your oaths are past, and now subscribe your names,

That his own hand may strike his honour down,
That violates the smallest branch herein. Shaksp.
The belief of this was of special importance, to confirm our hopes of another life, on which so many branches of christian piety do immediately depend. Hammond.

In the several branches of justice and charity, comprehended in those general rules, of loving our neighbour as ourselves, and of doing to others as we would have them do to us, there is nothing but what is most fit and reasonable. Tillotson.

This precept will oblige us to perform our duty, according to the nature of the various branches of it. Rogers.

3. Any part that shoots out from the rest.
And six branches shall come out of the sides of it; three branches of the candlestick out of the one side, and three branches of the candlestick out of the other side. Exodus.

His blood, which disperseth itself by the branches of veins, may be resembled to waters carried by brooks. Raleigh.

4. A smaller river running into, or proceeding from, a larger.

If, from a main river, any branch be separated and divided, then, where that branch doth first bound itself with new banks, there is that part of the river where the branch forsaketh the main stream, called the head of the river. Raleigh.

5. Any part of a family descending in a collateral line.

His father, a younger branch of the ancient stock planted in Somersetshire, took to wife the widow. Carew.

6. The offspring; the descendant.
Great Anthony! Spain's well-beseeming pride, Thou mighty branch of emperours and kings! Craford.

7. The antlers or shoots of a stag's horn.

8. The branches of a bridle are two pieces of bended iron, that bear the bit-mouth, the chains, and the curb, in the interval between the one and the other. Farrier's Dict.

9. [In architecture.] The arches of Gothick vaults; which arches tranfverfing from one angle to another, diagonal wise, form a cross between the other arches, which make the sides of the square, of which the arches are diagonals. Harris.

To BRANCH. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To spread in branches.
They were trained together in their childhoods, and there rooted betwixt them such an affection, which cannot choofe but branch now. Shaksp.

The cause of scattering the boughs, is the hasty breaking forth of the sap: and therefore those trees rise not in a body of any height, but branch near the ground. The cause of the pyramid, is the keeping in of the sap, long before it branch, and the spending of it, when it beginneth to branch, by equal degrees. Bacon.

Plant it round with shade
Of laurel, ever-green, and branching palm. Milton.

Straight as a line in beauteous order stood,
Of oaks unthorn a venerable wood;
Fresh was the graft beneath, and ev'ry tree
At distance planted, in a due degree,
Their branching arms in air, with equal space,
Stretch'd to their neighbours with a long embrace. Dryden.

One sees her thighs transform'd, another views
Her arms shot out, and branching into boughs. Addison.

2. To spread into separate and distinct parts and subdivisions.

The Alps at the one end, and the long range of Appenines that passes through the body of it, branch out, on all sides, into several different divisions. Addison.

If we would weigh, and keep in our minds, what it is we are considering, that would best instruct us when we should, or should not, branch into farther distinctions. Locke.

3. To speak diffusively, or with the distinction of the parts of a discourse.

I have known a woman branch out into a long dissertation upon the edging of a petticoat. Speator.

4. To have horns shooting out into antlers.
The swift stag from under ground
Bore up his branching head. Milton.

To BRANCH. v. a.

1. To divide as into branches.
The spirit of things animate are all continued within themselves, and are branched into canals, as blood is; and the spirits have not only branches, but certain cells or seats, where the principal spirits do reside. Bacon.

2. To adorn with needlework, representing flowers and sprigs.
In robe of lily white she was array'd,
That from her shoulder to her heel down laught,
The train whereof loose far behind her stray'd,
Branch'd with gold and pearl, most richly wrought. Spenser.

BRANCHER. n. f. [from branch.]
1. One that shoots out into branches.
If their child be not such a speedy spreader and brancher, like the vine, yet he may yield, with a little longer expectation, as useful and more sober fruit than the other. Watson.

2. [branchier, Fr.] In falconry, a young hawk.
I enlarge my discourse to the observation of the eires, the brancher, and the two ferts of lenthers. Watson.

BRANCHINESS. n. f. [from branchy.] Fullness of branches.

BRANCHLESS. adj. [from branch.]
1. Without shoots or boughs.
2. Without any valuable product; naked.
If I lose mine honour,
I lose myself; better I were not yours,
Than yours to branchless. Shaksp.

BRANCHY. adj. [from branch.] Full of branches; spreading.

Trees on trees o'erthrown,
Fall crackling round him, and the forests groan;
Sudden full twenty on the plain are strow'd,
And lopp'd, and lighten'd of their branchy load. Pope.

What carriage can bear away all the various,
rude, and unweildy loppings of a branchy tree at once! Watts.

BRAND. n. f. [bran'd, Saxon.]

1. A stick lighted, or fit to be lighted in the fire.
Have I caught thee?
He that parts us shall bring a brand from heav'n,
And fire us hence. Shaksp.

Take it, she said, and when your needs require,
This little brand will serve to light your fire. Dryden.

If, with double diligence they labour to retrieve the hours they have lost, they shall be saved; though this is a service of great difficulty, and like a brand plucked out of the fire. Rogers.

2. [brander, Runick.] A sword, in old language.
They looking back, all the eastern side beheld
Of paradise, so late their happy seat!
Wav'd over by that flaming brand; the gate
With dreadful faces throng'd, and fiery arms. Milton.

3. A thunderbolt.
The fire omnipotent prepares the brand,
By Vulcan wrought, and arms his potent hand. Granville.

4. A mark made by burning a criminal with a hot iron, to note him as infamous; a stigma.
Clerks convict should be burned in the hand, both because they might taste of some corporal punishment, and that they might carry a brand of infamy. Bacon.

The rules of good and evil are inverted, and a brand of infamy passes for a badge of honour. L'Estrange.

5. Any note of infamy.
Where did his wit on learning fix a brand,
And rail at arts he did not understand? Dryden.

To BRAND. v. a. [bran'ten, Dutch.] To mark with a brand, or note of infamy.
Have I liv'd thus long a wife, a true one,
Never yet branded with suspicion? Shaksp.

The king was after branded, by Perkin's proclamation, for an execrable breaker of the rights of holy church. Bacon.

Brand not their actions with so foul a name;
Pity, at least, what we are forc'd to blame. Dryden.
Ha! dare not for thy life, I charge thee, dare not
To brand the spotless virtue of my prince. Rowe.

Our punick faith
Is infamous, and branded to a proverb. Addison.
The spreader of the pardons answered him an easier way, by branding him with heresy. Atterbury.

BRANDGOOSE. n. f. A kind of wild fowl, less than a common goose, having its breast and wings of a dark colour. Dick.

To BRANDISH. v. a. [from brand, a sword.]

1. To wave, or shake, or flourish, as a weapon.
Brave Macbeth,
Disdaining fortune, with his brandish'd steel,
Like valour's minion, carved out his passage. Shaksp.

He said, and brandish'd at once his blade,
With eager pace pursu'd the flaming shade. Dryden.

Let me march their leader, not their prince;
And, at the head of your renown'd Cydonians, Brandish this sword. Smith.

2. To play with; to flourish.
He, who shall employ all the force of his reason, only in brandishing of syllogisms, will discover very little. Locke.

From brassy bosoms, and rough hearts of flint. Shakespeare.

2. Impudent.

BRASS. particp. adj. [from brass.] Burst; broken. Obsolete.

There creature never past,
That back returned without heavenly grace,
But dreadful furies which their chains have brass,
And damned sprights sent forth to make ill men agast. Spenser.

BRAT. n. f. [its etymology is uncertain: bratt, in Saxon, signifies a blanket; from which, perhaps, the modern signification may have come.]

1. A child, so called in contempt.

He leads them like a thing
Made by some other deity than nature,
That shapen man better; and they follow him,
Against us brats, with no less confidence,
Than boys pursuing summer butterflies. Shakespeare.

This brat is none of mine:
Hence with it, and, together with the dam,
Commit them to the fire. Shakespeare.

The friends, that got the brats, were poison'd too;

In this sad case what could our vermin do?

Jupiter summoned all the birds and beasts before him, with their brats and little ones, to see which of them had the prettiest children. L'Estrange.

I shall live to see the invisible lady, to whom I was obliged, and whom I never beheld, since she was a brat in hanging-sleeves. Swift.

I give command to kill or save,
Can grant ten thousand pounds a-year,
And make a beggar's brat a peer. Swift.

2. The progeny; the offspring.
The two late conspiracies were the brats and offspring of two contrary factions. South.

BRAVADO. n. f. [from bravado, Span.] A

Names it the invincible Armado. Anonymous.

BRAVE. adj. [brave, Fr.]

1. Courageous; daring; bold; generous; high-spirited.

An Egyptian soothsayer made Antonius believe, that his genius, which otherways was brave and confident, was, in the presence of Octavius Cæsar, poor and cowardly. Bacon.

From armed foes to bring a royal prize,
Shows your brave heart victorious as your eyes. Waller.

2. Gallant; having a noble mein; lofty; graceful.

I'll prove the prettier fellow of the two,
And wear my dagger with a braver grace. Shakespeare.

3. Magnificent; grand.
Rings put upon his fingers,
And brave attendants near him when he wakes;
Would not the beggar then forget himself? Shakespeare.

But whoso'er it was nature design'd
First a brave place, and then as brave a mind. Danham.

4. Excellent; noble: it is an indeterminate word, used to express the superabundance of any valuable quality in men or things.

Let not old age disgrace my high desire,
O heavenly foul, in human shape contain'd;
Old wood inflam'd doth yield the bravest fire,
When younger doth in smoke his virtue spend. Sidney.

If there be iron ore, and mills, iron is a brave commodity where wood aboundeth. Bacon.

If a statesman has not this science, he must be subject to a braver man than himself, whose province it is to direct all his actions to this end. Digby.

BRAVE. n. f. [brave, Fr.]

1. A Hector; a man daring beyond decency or discretion.

Hot br. ves, like thee, may fight, but know not well
To manage this, the last great stake. Dryden.

ner; courageously; gallantly; splendidly.

Martin Swart, with his Germans, performed bravely. Bacon.

No fire, nor foe, nor fate, nor night,
The Trojan hero did afright,
Who bravely twice renew'd the fight. Denham.

Your valour bravely did th' assault sustain,
And fill'd the moats and ditches with the slain. Dryden.

BRAVERY. n. f. [from brave.]

1. Courage; magnanimity; generosity; gallantry.

It denotes no great bravery of mind, to do that out of a desire of fame, which we could not be prompted to by a generous passion for the glory of him that made us. Spectator.

Juba, to all the bravery of a hero,
Adds softest love, and more than female sweetness. Addison.

2. Splendour; magnificence.

Where all the bravery that eye may see,
And all the happiness that heart desire,
Is to be found. Spenser.

3. Show; ostentation.

Let princes choose ministers more sensible of duty than of rising, and such as love business rather upon conscience than upon bravery. Bacon.

4. Bravado; boast.

Never could man, with more unmanlike bravery, use his tongue to her disgrace, which lately had sung sonnets of her praises. Sidney.

For a bravery upon this occasion of power, they crowned their new king in the cathedral church of Dublin. Bacon.

There are those that make it a point of bravery, to bid defiance to the oracles of divine revelation. L'Estrange.

BRAVO. n. f. [bravo, Ital.] A man who murders for hire.

For boldness, like the braves and banditti, is seldom employed, but upon desperate services.

No braves here profess the bloody trade,
Nor is the church the murderer's refuge made. Gay.

She troubled was, alas! that it might be,
With tedious brawlings of her parents dear. Sidney.

Here comes a man of comfort, whose advice
Hath often still'd my brawling discontent. Shaksp.

How now, Sir John! what, are you brawling here?

Does this become your place, your time, your business? Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Their batt'ring cannon charged to the mouths,
Till their foul-fearing clamours have brawld down
The flinty ribs of this contemptuous city. Shaksp.

In council she gives licence to her tongue
Loquacious, brawling, ever in the wrong. Dryd.

Leave all noisy contests, all immodest clamours, brawling language, and especially all personal scandalous and feurrility, to the meanest part of the vulgar world. Waller.

2. To speak loud and indecently.

His divisions, as the times do brawl,
Are in three heads; one pow'r against the French,
And one against Glendower. Shakespeare.

3. To make a noise. This title used.

As he lay along
Under an oak, whose antique root peeps out Upon the brook that brawls along this wood. Shakespeare.

BRAWL. n. f. [from the verb.] Quarrel; noise;
feurrility.

He findeth, that all controversies thereby are made but brawls; and therefore witheth, that, in some lawful assembly of churches, all these strifes may be decided. Hooker.

Never since that middle summer's spring
Met we on hill, in dale, or forest, or mead,
But with thy brawls thou hast disturb'd our sport. Shakespeare.

That bonum is an animal,
Made good with stout polemick brawl. Hudibras.

BRAWLER. n. f. [from brawl.] A wrangler; a quarrelsome, noisy fellow.

BRAWN. n. f. [of uncertain etymology.]

1. The fleshy or muscular part of the body.

The brawn of the arm must appear full, shadowed on one side, then shew the wrist-bone thereof. Peacham.

But most their looks on the black monarch bend,
His rising muscles and his brawn commend;
His double biting ax, and beamy spear,
Each asking a giantick force to rear. Dryden.

2. The arm, so called from its being muscular.

I'll hide my silver beard in a gold beaver,
And in my vantbrace put this wither'd brawn. Shakespeare.

I had purpose
Once more to hew thy target from thy brawn. Shakespeare.

3. Bulk; muscular strength.

The swift'rous hands are then of use, when I,
With this directing head, those hands apply;
Brawn without brain is thine. Dryden.

Slew friends and foes, and in the smoke retir'd. Dryden.

4. The violation of a law or contract.
That oath would sure contain them greatly,
or the breach of it bring them to shorter vengeance. Spenser.

What are those breaches of the law of nature and nations, which do forfeit all right in a nation to govern? Bacon.

Breach of duty towards our neighbours, still involves in it a breach of duty towards God. South.

The laws of the gospel are the only standing rules of morality; and the penalties affixed by God to the breach of those laws, the only guards that can effectually restrain men within the true bounds of decency and virtue. Rogers.

5. The opening in a coast.
But th' heedful boatman strongly forth did stretch,

His brawny arms, and all his body strain,
That th' utmost sandy beach they shortly fetch,
While the dread danger does behind remain. Spenser.

And generous wine, which thoughtful sorrow flies. Pope.

2. Food in general, such as nature requires:
to get bread, implies, to get sufficient for support without luxury.

In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread. Genesis.

If pretenders were not supported by the simplicity of the inquisitive fools, the trade would not find them bread. L'Estrange.

This dowager on whom my tale I found,
A simple sober life in patience led,
And had but just enough to buy her bread. Dryden.

When I submit to such indignities,
Make me a citizen, a senator of Rome;
To sell my country, with my voice, for bread. Philips.

I neither have been bred a scholar, a soldier, nor to any kind of business; this creates uneasiness in my mind, fearing I shall in time want bread. Spectator.

3. Support of life at large.
God is pleased to try our patience by the ingratitude of those who, having eaten of our bread, have lift up themselves against us. King Charles.

But sometimes virtue starves, while vice is fed:
What then? is the reward of virtue bread? Pope.

BREAD-CHIPPER. n. f. [from bread and chip.]
One that chips bread; a baker's servant; an under-butler.

No abuse, Hal, on my honour; no abuse. —

How the stile brightens, how the sense refines. Pope.
BRIGHTLY. adv. [from bright.] Splendidly; with lustre.

Safely I slept, till brightly dawning shone
The morn, conspicuous on her golden throne. Pope.

BRIGHTNESS. n. f. [from bright.]

1. Lustre; splendour; glitter.

The blazing brightness of her beauty's beam,
And glorious light of her sun-shining face,
To tell, were as to strive against the stream. Fairy Queen.

A sword, by long lying still, will contract a rust, which shall deface its brightness. South.

The moon put on her veil of light,
Mysterious veil, of brightness made,
That's both her lustre and her shade. Hudibras.

Vex'd with the present moment's heavy gloom,
Why seek we brightness from the years to come? Prior.

2. Acuteness.

The brightness of his parts, the solidity of his judgment, and the candour and generosity of his temper, distinguished him in an age of great politeness. Prior.

BRIILLANCY. n. f. [from brilliant.] Lustre;
splendour.

BRIILLIANT. adj. [brilliant, Fr.] Shining; sparkling; splendid; full of lustre.

So I have seen in larder dark

Of veal a lucid loin,

Replete with many a brilliant spark,

As wife philosophers remark,

At once both stink and shine. Dorset.

BRIILLIANT. n. f. A diamond of the finest cut, formed into angles, so as to refract the light, and shine more.

In deference to his virtues, I forbear
To shew you what the rest in orders were;
This brilliant is so spotless and so bright,
He needs not soil, but shines by his own proper light. Dryden.

BRIILLIANTNESS. n. f. [from brilliant.] Splen-dour; lustre.

BRIILLS. n. f. The hair on the eyelids of a horse. Dict.

BRIM. n. f. [brim, Icelandic.]

1. The edge of any thing.

His hat being in the form of a turban, daintily made, the locks of his hair came down about the brims of it. Bacon.

2. The upper edge of any vessel.

How my head in ointment swims!
How my cup o'erlooks her brims! Crashaw.

So when with crackling flames, a cauldron fries,
The bubbling waters from the bottom rise,
Above the brims they force their fiery way. Dryden's Æneid.

Thus in a basin drop a shilling,

Then fill the vessel to the brim,

You shall observe, as you are filling,

The pond'rous metal seems to swim. Swift.

3. The top of any liquor.

The feet of the priests that bare the ark, were dipped in the brim of the water. Joshua, iii. 15.

4. The bank of a fountain.

It told me it was Cynthia's own,
Within whose cheerful brims

That curious nymph had oft been known
To bathe her snowy limbs. Dryden.

TO BRIM. v. a. [from the noun.] To fill to
the top.

May the brimmed waves, for this,

Their full tribute never miss,

From a thousand rills. Milton.

This laid, a double wreath Evander twin'd:
And poplars black and white his temples bind:
Then brims his ample bowl; with like design

The rest invoke the gods, with sprinkled wine. Dryden.

TO BRIM. v. n. To be full to the brim.

Now horrid frays
Commence, the brimming glasses now are hurl'd
With dire intent. Philips.

B R I

BRIMFUL. adj. [from brim and full.] Full to the top; over-charged.

Measure my case, how by thy beauty's filling,
With seed of woes my heart brimful is charg'd. Sidney.

We have try'd the utmost of our friends;
Our legions are brimful, our cause is ripe.

Her brimful eyes, that ready flood,
And only wanted will to weep a flood,

Releas'd their wat'ry store. Dryden's Fables.

The good old king at parting wrung my hand,
His eyes brimful of tears; then fighting, cry'd,

Prithee, be careful of my son. Addison's Cato.

BRIMFULNESS. n. f. [from brimful.] Fullness to the top.

The Scot on his unfurnish'd kingdom,
Came pouring like a tide into a beach,
With ample and brimfulness of his force. Shakespeare's Henry V.

BRIMMER. n. f. [from brim.] A bowl full to
the top.

When healths go round, and kindly brimmers flow,
Till the fresh garlands on their foreheads glow. Dryden.

BRIMMING. adj. [from brim.] Full to the brim.

And twice besides her blessings never fail,
To store the dairy with a brimming pail. Dryden.

BRIMSTONE. n. f. [corrupted from brim or brimstone, that is, fiery stone.] Sulphur. See SUL-PHUR.

From his infernal furnace forth he threw Huge flames, that dimm'd all the heaven's light, Enroll'd in dusky smoke and brimstone blue. Fairy Queen.

The vapour of the grotto del Canè is generally supposed to be sulphureous, though I can see no reason for such a supposition: I put a whole bundle of lighted brimstone matches to the smoke, they all went out in an instant. Addison on Italy.

BRIMSTONY. adj. [from brimstone.] Full of brimstone; containing sulphur; sulphureous.

She tam'd the brinded lioness,
And spotted mountain pard. Milton.

My brinded heifer to the stake I lay;
Two thriving calves she suckles twice a-day. Dryden.

BRINDLE. n. f. [from brinded.] The state of being brinded.

A natural brindle. Clarissa.

BRINDED. adj. [from brindle.] Brinded;
streaked.

The boar, my sisters! aim the fatal dart,
And strike the brinded monster to the heart. Addison's Ovid.

BRINE. n. f.

1. Water impregnated with salt.

The encrease of the weight of water, will encrease its power of bearing; as we see brine, when it is salt enough, will bear an egg. Bacon's Natural History.

Diffolve sheeps dung in water, and add to it as much salt as will make a strong brine, in this liquor steep your corn. Mortimer.

2. The sea; as it is salt.

All, but mariners,
Plung'd in the foaming brine, did quit the vessel.

Then all afire with me. Shakespeare's Tempest.

The air was calm, and, on the level brine,
Sleeke Panope, with all her sisters, play'd. Mil.

As when two adverse winds =
Engage with horrid shock, the ruffled brine

Roars stormy. Philips.

3. Tears, as they are salt.

What a deal of brine
Hath wash'd thy fallow cheeks for Rosaline! Sha.

BRINE-PIT. n. f. [from brine and pit.] Pit of salt water.

Then I lov'd thee,
And shew'd thee all the qualities o' th' isle,
The fresh springs, brinepits, barren place, and fertile. Shakespeare.

TO BRING. v. a. [bringan, Sax. preter. I brought; part. pass. brought; bpoht, Sax.]

B R I

1. To fetch from another place; distinguished from to carry, or convey, to another place.

I was the chief that rais'd him to the crown,
And I'll be chief to bring him down again. Shaksf.

And as she was going to fetch it, he called to her, and said, Bring me, I pray thee, a morsel of bread in thy hand. King.

A registry of lands may furnish easy securities of money, that shall be brought over by strangers. Templ.

2. To convey in one's own hand; not to send by another.

And if my wish'd alliance please your king,
Tell him he should not send the peace, but bring. Dryden.

3. To produce; to procure, as a cause.

There is nothing will bring you more honour, and more ease, than to do what right in justice
you may. Bacon.

4. To reduce; to recal.

Bring back gently their wandering minds, by going before them in the train they should per-sue, without any rebuke. Locke.

Nathan's fable had so good an effect, as to bring the man after God's own heart to a right sense of his guilt. Spectator.

5. To attract; to draw along.

In distillation, the water ascends difficultly, and brings over with it some part of the oil of vitriol. Newton's Opticks.

6. To put into any particular state or circumstances, to make liable to any thing.

Having got the way of reasoning, which that study necessarily brings the mind to, they might be able to transfer it to other parts of knowledge, as they shall have occasion. Locke.

The question for bringing the king to justice was immediately put, and carried without any opposition, that I can find. Swift's Presbyterian Plea.

7. To lead by degrees.

A due consideration of the vanities of the world, will naturally bring us to the contempt of it; and the contempt of the world will as certainly bring us home to ourselves. L'Esperance.

The understanding should be brought to the difficult and knotty parts of knowledge, by infer-rible degrees. Locke.

8. To recal; to summons.

But those, and more than I to mind can bring,
Menalcas has not yet forgot to sing. Dryden.

9. To induce; to prevail upon.

The nature of the things, contained in those words, would not suffer him to think otherwise, how, or whensoever, he is brought to reflect on them. Locke.

It seems so preposterous a thing to men, to make themselves unhappy in order to happiness, that they do not easily bring themselves to it. Locke.

Profitable employments would be no less a diversion than any of the idle sports in fashion, if men could but be brought to delight in them. Locke.

10. To bring about. [See ABOUT.] To bring to pass; to effect.

This he conceives not hard to bring about,
If all of you would join to help him out. Dryden's Indian Emperor.

This turn of mind threw off the oppositions of envy and competition; it enabled him to gain the most vain and impracticable into his designs, and to bring about several great events, for the advantage of the publick. Addison's Freeholder.

11. To bring forth. To give birth to; to produce.

The good queen,
For she is good, hath brought you forth a daughter:
Here 'tis; commends it to your blessing. Shaksf.

More wonderful
Than that which, by creation, first brought forth Light out of darkness. Par. Lost.

Bewail thy falsehood, and the pious works
It hath brought forth, to make thee memorable
Among illustrious women, faithful wives. Milton's Agonist.

Bellona leads thee to thy lover's hand,
Another queen brings forth another brand,
To burn with foreign fires her native land! Dry.

Idleness

Idleness and luxury bring forth poverty and want; and this tempts men to injustice; and that causeth enmity and animosity. Tillotson.

The value of land is raised, when it is fitted to bring forth a greater quantity of any valuable product. Locke.

12. To bring forth. To bring to light. The thing that is hid, bringeth he forth to light. Job, xxxviii. 11.

13. To bring in. To place in any condition. He protests he loves you, And needs no other tutor, but his liking, To bring you in again. Shakespeare's Othello.

14. To bring in. To reduce. Send over into that realm such a strong power of men, as should perforce bring in all that rebellious rout, and loose people. Spenser on Ireland.

15. To bring in. To afford gain. The sole measure of all his courtesies is, what return they will make him, and what revenue they will bring him in. Shaksb.

Trade brought us in plenty and riches. Locke.

16. To bring in. To introduce. Entertain no long discourse with any; but, if you can, bring in something to season it with religion. Taylor.

There is but one God, who made heaven and earth, and sea and winds; but the folly and madness of mankind brought in the images of gods. Stillington.

The fruitfulness of Italy, and the like, are not brought in by force, but naturally rise out of the argument. Addison.

Since he could not have a seat among them himself, he would bring in one who had more merit. Taylor.

Quotations are best brought in, to confirm some opinion controverted. Swift.

17. To bring off. To clear; to procure to be acquitted; to cause to escape. I trusted to my head, that has betrayed me; and I found fault with my legs, that would otherwise have brought me off. L'Estrange.

Set a kite upon the bench, and it is forty to one he'll bring off a crow at the bar. L'Estrange.

The best way to avoid this imputation, and to bring off the credit of our understanding, is to be truly religious. Tillotson.

18. To bring on. To engage in action. If there be any that would reign, and take up all the time, let him find means to take them off, and bring others on. Bacon.

19. To bring on. To produce as an occasional cause. The fountains of the great deep being broke open, so as a general destruction and devastation was brought upon the earth, and all things in it. Burnet's Theory.

The great question, which, in all ages, has disturbed mankind, and brought on them those mischiefs. Locke.

20. To bring over. To convert; to draw to a new party. This liberty should be made use of upon few occasions of small importance, and only with a view of bringing over his own side, another time, to something of greater and more publick moment. Swift on the Sentiments of a Church of England man.

The protestant clergy will find it, perhaps, no difficult matter to bring great numbers over to the church. Swift.

21. To bring out. To exhibit; to shew. If I make not this cheat bring out another, and the shearers prove sheep, let me be unrolled. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

Which he could bring out, where he had, And what he bought them for, and paid. Hudibras.

These shake his soul, and, as they boldly press, Bring out his crimes, and force him to confess. Dryden.

Another way made use of, to find the weight of the denarii, was by the weight of Greek coins; but those experiments bring out the denarius heavier. Arbutnot.

22. To bring under. To subdue; to repress. That sharp course which you have set down, for the bringing under of those rebels of Ulster, and preparing a way for their perpetual reformation. Spenser.

To say, that the more capable, or the better deserver, hath such right to govern, as he may compulsorily bring under the leis worthy, is idle. Bacon.

23. To bring up. To educate; to instruct; to form. The well bringing up of the people, serves as a most sure bond to hold them. Sidney.

He that takes upon him the charge of bringing up young men, especially young gentlemen, should have something more in him than Latin. Locke.

They frequently conversed with this lovely virgin, who had been brought up by her father in knowledge. Addison's Guardian.

24. To bring up. To introduce to general practice. Several obliging deferences, condescensions, and submissions, with many outward forms and ceremonies, were first of all brought up among the politer part of mankind, who lived in courts and cities. Spectator.

25. To bring up. To cause to advance. Bring up your army; but I think you'll find They've not prepar'd for us. Shakespeare.

26. Bring retains in all its senses the idea of an agent, or cause producing a real or metaphorical motion of something towards something; for it is oft said, that he brought his companion out. The meaning is, that he was brought to something that was likewise without. BRINGER. n. f. [from bring.] The person that brings any thing. Yet the first bringer of unwelcome news Hath but a losing office: and his tongue Sounds ever after as a fullen bell, Remember'd tolling a dead friend. Shaksb.

Best you see safe the bringer Out of the host: I must attend mine office. Shakespeare.

The reeve and the miller are distinguished from each other, as much as the lady prioress and the broad speaking gap-toothed wife of Bath. Dryden.

Love made him doubt his broad barbarian found;
By love, his want of words and wit he found. Dryden.

If open vice be what you drive at,

A name so broad will ne'er connive at. Dryden.

The broadest mirth unfeeling folly wears,

Less pleasing far than virtue's very tears. Pope.

Room for my lord! three jockeys in his train;

Six huntmen with a shout precede his chair;

He grins, and looks broad nonsense with a stare. Pope.

5. Obscene; fulsome; tending to obscenity.

As chaste and modest as he is esteemed, it cannot be denied, but in some places he is broad and fulsome. Dryden.

Though now arraign'd, he read with some delight;

Because he seems to chew the cud again,

When his broad comment makes the text too plain. Dryden.

6. Bold; not delicate; not reserved.

Who can speak *broad*er than he that has no house to put his head in? Such may rail against great buildings. Shakspere.

From broad words, and 'cause he fail'd

His presence at the tyrant's feast, I hear,

Macduff lives in disgrace. Shakspere.

BROAD as long. Equal upon the whole.

The mobile are still for levelling; that is to say, for advancing themselves; for it is as broad as long, whether they rise to others, or bring others down to them. L'Estrange.

BROAD-CLOTH. n. f. [from broad and cloth.] A fine kind of cloth.

Thus, a wife taylor is not pinching;
But turns at ev'ry seam an inch in:
Or else, be sure, your broad-cloth breeches
Will ne'er be smooth, nor hold their stitches. Swift.

BROAD-EYED. adj. [from broad and eye.] Having a wide survey.

In despite of broad-ey'd watchful day,
I would into thy bosom pour my thoughts:
But, ah! I will not. Shakspere.

As for the politick and wholesome laws, they were interpreted to be but brocage of an usurer, thereby to woo and win the hearts of the people. Bacon.

3. The trade of dealing in old things; the trade of a broker. Feet.

Poor poet ape, that would be thought our chief,
Whose works are e'en the frippery of wit,
From brocade is become so bold a thief,
As we, the robb'd, leave rage, and pity it. B. Jon.

4. The transaction of business for other men.
So much as the quantity of money is lessened, so much must the share of every one that has a right to this money be the less, whether he be landholder, for his goods, or labourer, for his hire, or merchant, for his brocade. Locke.

BROCCOLI. n. f. [Italian.] A species of cabbage.
Contented with little, I can piddle here,
On broccoli and mutton round the year;
But ancient friends, tho' poor, or out of play,
That touch my bell, I cannot turn away. Pope.

To BROOD. v. n. [brædan; Sax.]

1. To sit as on eggs; to hatch them.

Thou from the first
Wast present, and, with mighty wings outspread
Dove-like sat'st brooding on the vast abyss,
And mad'st it pregnant. Milton.

Here nature spreads her fruitful sweetness round,

Breathes on the air, and broods upon the ground.
Dryden.

2. To cover chickens under the wing.

Exalted hence, and drunk with secret joy,
Their young succession all their cares employ;
They breed, they brood, instruct and educate,
And make provision for the future state.
Dryden.

Find out some uncouth cell,
Where brooding darkness spreads his jealous wings,
And the night raven sings. Milton.

3. To remain long in anxiety, or solicitous thought.

O'er which his melancholy sits on brood;
And I doubt the hatch and the disclose
Will be some danger. Shakespeare.

BROODY. adj. [from brood.] In a state of sitting on the eggs; inclined to sit.

The common hen, all the while she is broody, fits, and leads her chickens, and uses a voice which we call clocking. Ray.

BROOK. n. f. [broc, or hroc, Sax.] A running water, less than a river.

A substitute shines brightly as a king,
Until a king be by; and then his state
Empties itself, as doth an inland brook
Into the main of waters. Shakespeare.

Or

Of many grateful altars I would rear,
Of grassy turf; and pile up every stone,
Of lustre, from the brook; in memory,
Of monument to ages.

And to Cephus' brook their way pursue:
The stream was troubled, but the ford they knew.

Springs make little rivulets; those united, make brooks; and those coming together, make rivers, which empty themselves into the sea.

To BROOK. v. a. [bpuca, Sax.] To bear; to endure; to support.

Even they, which brook it worst, that men should tell them of their duties, when they are told the same by a law, think very well and reasonably of it.

A thousand more mischances than this one,
Have learned me to brook this patiently.

How use doth breed a habit in a man?
This shadowy desert, unfrequented woods,
I better brook than flourishing peopl'd towns.

Heav'n, the seat of bliss,
Brooks not the works of violence, and war.

Most men can much rather brook their being reputed knaves, than for their honesty be accounted fools.

Restraint thou wilt not brook; but think it hard,
Your prudence is not trusted as your guard.

To BROOK. v. n. To endure; to be content.

He, in these wars, had flatly refused his aid;
because he could not brook, that the worthy prince Plangus was, by his chosen Tiridates, preferred before him.

BROOKLINE. n. f. [becabunga, Lat.] A fort of water speedwell, very common in ditches.

And shade for sheep, and food for flocks, produce.

2. A besom; so called from the matter of which it is sometimes made.

Not a mouse
Shall disturb this hallow'd house;
I am sent with broom before,
To sweep the dust behind the door.

If they came into the best apartment, to set any thing in order, they were saluted with a broom.

BROOMLAND. n. f. [from broom and land.] Land that bears broom.

I have known sheep cured of the rot, when they have not been far gone with it, by being put into broomlands.

BROOMSTAFF. n. f. [from broom and staff.]
The staff to which the broom is bound; the handle of a besom.

They fell on; I made good my place: at length they came to the broomstaff with me; I defied 'em still.

From the age,
That children tread this worldly stage,
Broomstaff, or poker, they bestride,
And round the parlour love to ride.

Sir Roger pointed at something behind the door, which I found to be an old broomstaff.

BROOMSTICK. n. f. The same as broomstaff.

When I beheld this, I sighed and said within myself, SURELY MORTAL MAN IS A BROOM-STICK!

BROOMY. adj. [from broom.] Full of broom.

The kennel edge, where wheels had worn the place.

BROT. n. f. [bpoð, Sax.] Liquor in which fish is boiled.

You may make the broth for two days, and take the one half every day.

Instead of light deserts and luscious froth,
Our author treats to-night with Spartan broth.

If a nurse, after being sucked dry, eats broth,
the infant will suck the broth almost unaltered.

BROTHER. n. f. [brotel, Fr.] A house of lewd entertainment; a bawdyhouse.

Perchance
I saw him enter such a house of sale,
Videlicet, a brothel.

Then courts of kings were held in high renown,
Ere made the common brothels of the town:

There, virgins honourable vows receiv'd,
But chaste as maids in monasteries liv'd.

From its old ruins brothelhouses rise,
Scenes of lewd loves, and of polluted joys.

The libertine retires to the stews, and to the brothel.

BROTHER. n. f. [bpoðer, bpoðon, Sax.]
Plural, brothers, or breibren.

1. One born of the same father and mother.
Be sad, good brothers;

Sorrow so royally in you appears,
That I will deeply put the fashion on.

Whilst kin their kin, brother the brother foils,
Like ensigns all, against like ensigns bend.

These two are breibren, Adam, and to come Out of thy loins.

Comparing two men, in reference to one common parent, it is very easy to form the ideas of brothers.

2. Any one closely united; associate.
We few, we happy few, we band of brothers;

For he, to-day that sheds his blood with me,
shall be my brother.

3. Any one resembling another in manner, form or profession.

man in general.

BROTHERHOOD. n. f. [from brother and hood.]

1. The state or quality of being a brother.
This deep disgrace of brotherhood

Touches me deeper than you can imagine.

Finds brotherhood in thee no sharper spur.

So it be a right to govern, whether you call it supreme father, or supreme brotherhood, will be all one, provided we know who has it.

2. An association of men for any purpose; a fraternity.

There was a fraternity of men at arms, called the brotherhood of St. George, erected by parliament, consisting of thirteen the most noble and worthy persons.

3. A class of men of the same kind.
He was sometimes so engaged among the wheels, that not above half the poet appeared; at other times, he became as conspicuous as any of the brotherhood.

BROTHERLY. adj. [from brother.] Natural;
such as becomes or befits a brother.

He was a priest, and looked for a priest's reward; which was our brotherly love, and the good of our souls and bodies.

Though more our money than our cause,
Their brotherly assistance draws.

They would not go before the laws, but follow them; obeying their superiors, and embracing one another in brotherly piety and concord.

BROTHERLY. adv. After the manner of a brother; with kindness and affection.

I speak but brotherly of him; but should I anatomize him to thee as he is, I must blush and weep.

BROUGHT. [participle passive of bring.]
The Turks forsook the walls, and could not be brought on again to the assault.

The instances brought by our author are but slender proofs.

BROW. n. f. [brop, Saxon.]

1. The arch of hair over the eye.
'Tis now the hour which all to rest allow,
And sleep fits heavy upon every brow.

2. The forehead.
She could have run, and waddled about;
For even the day before she broke her brow.

So we some antique hero's strength,
Learn by his lance's weight and length;
As these vast beams expels the beast,
Whose shady brows alive they dreft.

3. The general air of the countenance.
Then call them to our preference face to face,
And frowning brow to brow.

Though all things foul would bear the brows of grace,
Yet grace must look still so.

4. The edge of any high place.
The early nothing dismayed, came forwards that day unto a little village, called Stoke, and there encamped that night, upon the brow or hanging of a hill.

On the brow of the hill, beyond that city, they were somewhat perplexed by spying the French embassador, with the king's coach, and others, attending him.

Them with fire, and hostile arms,
Fearless assault; and, to the brow of heav'n
Pursuing, drive them out from God and bliss.

To BROW. v. a. [from the noun.] To bound;
to limit; to be at the edge of.

Tending my flocks hard by i' th' hilly crofts,
That brow this bottom glade.

To BROWBEAT. v. a. [from brow and beat.]
To depress with severe brows, and stern or lofty looks.

It is not for a magistrate to frown upon, and browbeat those who are hearty and exact in their ministry; and, with a grave nod, to call a resolu-ed zeal, want of prudence.

What man will voluntarily expose himself to the imperious browbeatings and scorns of great men?

Count Tariff endeavoured to browbeat the plaintiff, while he was speaking; but though he was not so impudent as the count, he was every whit as sturdy.

I will not be browbeaten by the supercilious looks of my adversaries.

Thence breaking forth, did thick about me throng, Too feeble I 't abide the brunt so strong. Spenser.

The friendly rug preserv'd the ground, And headlong knight, from bruise or wound,

Like feather bed betwixt a wall And heavy brunt of cannon-ball. Hudibras.

BRUSH. n. f. [brasse, from bruscus, Lat.] 1. An instrument to clean any thing, by rubbing off the dirt or soil. It is generally made of bristles set in wood.

2. It is used for the larger and stronger pencils used by painters.

Whence comes all this rage of wit? this arming all the pencils and brushes of the town against me? Stillington.

With a small brush you must smear the glue well upon the joint of each piece. Moxon.

3. A rude assault; a shock; rough treatment; which, by the same metaphor, we call a scouring.

Let grow thy sinews till their knots be strong, And tempt not yet the brushes of the war. Shakspere.

It could not be possible, that, upon so little a brush as Waller had sustained, he could not be able to follow and disturb the king. Clarendon.

Else, when we put it to the push, They had not giv'n us such a brush. Hudibras.

TO BRUSH. v. a. [from the noun.] 1. To sweep or rub with a brush.

If he be not in love with some woman, there is no believing old signs; he brushes his hat o' morn'ing; what should that bode? Shakspere.

2. To strike with quickness, as in brushing.

The wrathful beast about him turned light, And him so rudely passing by, did brush

With his long tail, that horse and man to ground did rush. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

Has Somnus brush'd thy eyelids with his rod? Dryden.

His son Cupavo brush'd the briny flood, Upon his stern a brawny centaur stood. Dryden.

High o'er the billows flew the mazy load, And near the ship came thund'ring on the flood,

It almost brush'd the helm. Pope.

3. To paint with a brush.

You have commissioned me to paint your shop, and I have done my best to brush you up like your neighbours. Pope.

4. To carry away, by an act like that of brushing; to sweep.

And from the boughs brush off the evil dew, And heal the harms of thwarting thunder blew. Milton.

The receptacle of waters, into which the mouths of all rivers must empty themselves, ought to have so spacious a surface, that as much water may be continually brushed off by the winds, and exhaled by the sun, as, besides what falls again, is brought into it by all the rivers. Bentley.

5. To move as the brush.

A thousand nights have brush'd their balmy wings Over these eyes. Dryden.

TO BRUSH. v. n. 1. To move with haste: a ludicrous word applied to men.

Nor wept his fate, nor cast a pitying eye, Nor took him down, but brush'd regardless by. Dryden.

The French had gather'd all their force, And William met them in their way;

Yet off they brush'd, both foot and horse. Prior.

2. To fly over; to skim lightly.

Nor love is always of a vicious kind, But oft to virtuous acts inflames the mind,

Awakes the sleepy vigour of the soul, And, brushing o'er, adds motion to the pool. Dryden.

BRU'SHER. n. f. [from brush.] He that uses a brush.

Sir Henry Wotton used to say, that critics were like brushers of noblemen's cloaths. Bacon.

BRU'SHWOOD. n. f. [from brush and wood.] I know not whether it may not be corrupted from browsewood. Rough, low, close, shrubby thickets; small wood fit for fire.

It smokes, and then with trembling breath the blows, Till in a cheerful blaze the flames arose.

With brushwood, and with chips, she strengthens these, And adds at last the boughs of rotten trees. Dryden.

BRU'SHY. adj. [from brush.] Rough or shaggy, like a brush.

I suspected, that it might have proceeded from some small unheeded drop of blood, wiped off by the brushy substance of the nerve, from the knife wherewith it was cut. Boyle.

TO BRU'STLE. v. n. [brusthan, Saxon.] To crackle; to make a small noise. Skinner.

BRU'TAL. adj. [brutal, French; from brute.] 1. That which belongs to a brute; that which we have in common with brutes.

There is no opposing brutal force to the stratagems of human reason. L'Estrange.

2. Savage; cruel; inhuman.

The brutal business of the war Is manag'd by thy dreadful servants care. Dryden.

BRU'TALITY. n. f. [brutalité, Fr.] Savageness; churlishness; inhumanity.

Courage, in an ill-bred man, has the air, and escapes not the opinion of brutality. Locke.

TO BRU'TALIZE. v. n. [brutaliser, Fr.] To grow brutal or savage.

Upon being carried to the Cape of Good Hope, he mixed, in a kind of transport, with his countrymen, brutalized with them in their habit and manners, and would never again return to his foreign acquaintance. Addison.

TO BRU'TALIZE. v. a. To make brutal or savage.

BRU'TALLY. adv. [from brutal.] Churlishly; inhumanly; cruelly.

Mrs. Bull aimed a knife at John, though John threw a bottle at her head, very brutally indeed. Arbutnot.

BRUTE. adj. [brutus, Latin.] 1. Senseless; unconscious.

Nor yet are we so low and base as their atheism would depress us; not walking statues of clay, not the sons of brute earth, whose final inheritance is death and corruption. Bentley.

2. Savage; irrational; ferine.

Even brute animals make use of this artificial way of making divers motions, to have several significations to call, warn, chide, cherish, threaten. Holder.

In the promulgation of the Mosaic law, if so much as a brute beast touched the mountain, it was to be struck through with a dart. South.

3. Bestial; in common with beasts.

Then to subdue, and quell, through all the earth, Brute violence, and proud tyrannick pow'r. Milton.

4. Rough; ferocious; uncivilized.

The brute philosopher, who ne'er has prov'd The joy of loving, or of being lov'd. Pope.

BRUTE.

BUB

BRUTE. n. f. [from the adjective.] An irrational creature; a creature without reason; a savage. What may this mean? Language of man pronounced.

By tongue of brute, and human sense express'd!

To those three present impulses, of sense, memory, and instinct, most, if not all, the faculties of brutes may be reduced.

Brutes may be considered as either aerial, terrestrial, aquatic, or amphibious. I call those aerial which have wings, wherewith they can support themselves in the air; terrestrial are those, whose only place of rest is upon the earth; aquatic are those, whose constant abode is upon the water.

Heav'n from all creatures hides the book of fate, All but the page prescrib'd this present state; From brutes what men, from men what spirits know; Or who could suffer being here below?

To BRUTE. v. a. [written ill for bruit.] To report. This, once bruted through the army, filled them all with heaviness.

BRUTENESS. n. f. [from brute.] Brutality: a word not now used.

Thou dotard vile,
That with thy bruteness shend'st thy comely age.

To BRUTIFY. v. a. [from brute.] To make a man a brute.

O thou fallacious woman! am I then brutified? Ay; feel it here; I sprout, I bud, I am ripe horn mad.

BRUTISH. adj. [from brute.]

1. Bestial; resembling a beast.
Of Isis, Isis, Orus, and their train,
With monstrous shapes and forceries abus'd Fanatick Egypt, and her priests, to seek Their wand'ring gods disguis'd in brutish forms.

2. Having the qualities of a brute; rough; savage; ferocious.

Brutes, and brutish men, are commonly more able to bear pain than others.

3. Gross; carnal.
For thou thyself hast been a libertine,
As sensual as the brutish sting itself.
After he has slept himself into some use of himself, by much ado he staggers to his table again, and there acts over the same brutish scene.

4. Ignorant; untaught; uncivilized.
They were not so brutish, that they could be ignorant to call upon the name of God.

BRUTISHLY. adv. [from brutish.] In the manner of a brute, savagely; irrationally; grossly.

I am not so diffident of myself, as brutishly to submit to any man's dictates.

For a man to found a confident practice upon a disputable principle, is brutishly to outrun his reason.

BRUTISHNESS. n. f. [from brutish.] Brutality; savageness.

All other courage, besides that, is not true valour, but brutishness.

BRUYONY. n. f. [brionia, Latin.] A plant.

BUB. n. f. [a cant word.] Strong malt liquor.

Or if it be his fate to meet
With folks who have more wealth than wit,
He loves cheap port, and double bub,
And settles in the humdrum club.

BUBBLE. n. f. [bubbel, Dutch.]

1. A small bladder of water; a film of water filled with wind.

Bubbles are in the form of a hemisphere; air within, and a little skin of water without: and it seemeth somewhat strange, that the air should rise so swiftly, while it is in the water, and, when it cometh to the top, should be stayed by so weak a cover as that of the bubble is.

The colours of bubbles, with which children play, are various, and change their situation variously, without any respect to confine or shadow.

2. Any thing which wants solidity and firmness; any thing that is more specious than real.

The earl of Lincoln was induced to participate, not lightly upon the strength of the proceedings there, which was but a bubble, but upon letters from the lady Margaret.

BUC

Then a soldier,
Seeking the bubble reputation,
Even in the cannon's mouth.

War, he sung, is toil and trouble,
Honour but an empty bubble,
Fighting still, and still destroying.

3. A cheat; a false show.

The nation then too late will find,
Directors promises but wind,
South-sea at best a mighty bubble.

4. The person cheated.

Cease, dearest mother, cease to chide;
Gany's a cheat, and I'm a bubble;

Yet why this great excess of trouble?

He has been my bubble these twenty years, and, to my certain knowledge, understands no more of his own affairs, than a child in swaddling clothes.

To BUBBLE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To rise in bubbles.

Alas! a crimson river of warm blood,
Like to a bubbling fountain stir'd with wind,
Doth rise and fall.

Adder's fork, and blindworm's sting,
Lizard's leg, and owl's wing:

For a charm of pow'rful trouble,
Like a hellbroth boil and bubble.

Still bubble on, and pour forth blood and tears.

The same spring suffers at some times a very manifest remission of its heat: at others, as manifest an increase of it; yea, sometimes to that excess, as to make it boil and bubble with extreme heat.

2. To run with a gentle noise.

For these the bubbling springs appear'd to mourn,
And whispering pines made vows for thy return.

Not bubbling fountains to the thirsty swain,
Not show'rs to larks, or sunshine to the bee,
Are half so charming as thy sight to me.

To BUBBLE. v. a. To cheat: a cant word.

He tells me, with great passion, that she has bubbled him out of his youth; and has drill'd him on to five and fifty.

Charles Mather could not bubble a young beau better with a toy.

BUBBLER. n. f. [from bubble.] A cheat.

What words can suffice to express, how infinitely I esteem you, above all the great ones in this part of the world; above all the Jews, jobbers, and bubblers!

BUBBY. n. f. A woman's breast.

Foh! say they, to see a handsome, brisk, genteel, young fellow, so much governed by a doating old woman; why don't you go and suck the bubby?

BUBO. n. f. [Lat. from bubō, the groin.] That part of the groin from the bending of the thigh to the scrotum; and therefore all tumours in that part are called bubos.

I suppurated it after the manner of a bubo, opened it, and endeavoured detersion.

BUBONCELE. n. f. [Lat. from bubō, the groin, and cele, a rupture.] A particular kind of rupture, when the intestines break down into the groin.

When the intestine, or omentum, falls through the rings of the abdominal muscles into the groin, it is called hernia inguinalis, or if into the scrotum, scrotalis: these two, though the first only is properly so called, are known by the name of buboncele.

BUBKLE. n. f. A red pimple.

His face is all bubkles, and wheiks, and knobs, and flames of fire.

BUCANERS. n. f. A cant word for the privateers, or pirates, of America.

BUCCELLATION. n. f. [buccella, a mouthful, Lat.] In some chymical authors, signifies a dividing into large pieces.

BUCK. n. f. [baucke, Germ. fuds, or lye.]

1. The liquor in which clothes are washed.

Buck! I would I could wash myself of the buck!

BUC

I warrant you, buck, and of the season too it shall appear.

2. The clothes washed in the liquor.

Of late, not able to travel with her furred pack, she washes bucks here at home.

BUCK. n. f. [bauch, Welch; bock, Dutch; bouc, Fr.] The male of the fallow deer; the male of rabbits, and other animals.

Bucks, goats, and the like are said to be tripping or saliant, that is going or leaping.

To BUCK. v. a. [from the noun.] To wash clothes.

Here is a basket; he may creep in here, and throw foul linen upon him, as if it were going to bucking.

To BUCK. v. n. [from the noun.] To copulate as bucks and does.

The chief time of setting traps, is in their bucking time.

BUCKBASKET. n. f. The basket in which clothes are carried to the wash.

They conveyed me into a buckbasket; rammed me in with foul shirts, foul stockings, and greasy napkins.

BUCKBEAN. n. f. [buckboonen, Dutch.] A plant; a sort of trefoil.

The bitter nauseous plants, as centaury, buckbean, gentian, of which tea may be made, or wines by infusion.

BUCKET. n. f. [baquet, French.]

1. The vessel in which water is drawn out of a well.

Now is this golden crown like a deep well,
That owes two buckets, filling one another;
The emptier ever dancing in the air,
The other down unseen, and full of water.

Is the sea ever likely to be evaporated by the sun, or to be emptied with buckets?

2. The vessels in which water is carried, particularly to quench a fire.

Now streets grow throng'd, and, busy as by day,
Some run for buckets to the hallow'd quire;
Some cut the pipes, and some the engines play;
And some, more bold, mount ladders to the fire.

The porringers, that in a row
Hung high and make a glitt'ring show,
To a less noble substance chang'd,
Were now but leathern buckets rang'd.

BUCKLE. n. f. [buecl, Welch, and the same in the Armorick; boucle, Fr.]

1. a link of metal, with a tongue or catch made to fasten one thing to another.

Fair lined slippers for the cold,
With buckles of the purest gold.

The chlamys was a sort of short cloak tied with a buckle, commonly to the right shoulder.

Three seal-rings; which after, melted down,
Form'd a vast buckle for his widow's gown.

2. The state of the hair crisped and curled, by being kept long in the same state.

The greatest beau was dressed in a flaxen periwig; the wearer of it goes in his own hair at home, and lets his wig lie in buckle for a whole half year.

That live-long wig, which Gorgon's self might own,
Eternal buckle takes in Parian stone.

To BUCKLE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fasten with a buckle.

Like sapphire, pearl, in rich embroidery,
Buckled below fair knighthood's bending knee.

France, whose armour conscience buckled on,
Whom zeal and charity brought to the field.

Thus, ever, when I buckle on my helmet,
Thy fears afflict thee.

When you carry your master's riding coat, wrap your own in it, and buckle them close up with a strap.

2. To prepare to do any thing: the metaphor is taken from buckling on the armour.

The Saracen, this hearing rose again,
And catching up in haste his three square shield,
And shining helmet, soon him buckled to the field.

3. To

BUD

3. To join in battle.
The lord Gray, captain of the men at arms, was forbidden to charge, until the foot of the avant-guard were buckled with them in front. Hayward.

4. To confine.
How brief the life of man
Runs his erring pilgrimage!
That the stretching of a span
Buckles in his sum of age. Shakespeare.
To BUCKLE. v. n. [bucken, Germ.]
1. To bend; to bow.
The wretch, whose fever-weaken'd joints,
Like strengthless hinges, buckle under life
Impatient of his fit, breaks like a fire
Out of his keeper's arms. Shakespeare.
2. To buckle to. To apply to; to attend. See the active, 2d sense.
Now a covetous old crafty knave,
At dead of night, shall raise his son, and cry,
Turn out, you rogue; how like a beast you lie;
Go buckle to the law. Dryden.
This is to be done in children, by trying them, when they are by laziness unbent, or by avocation bent another way, and endeavouring to make them buckle to the thing proposed. Locke.
3. To buckle with. To engage with; to encounter; to join in a close fight, like men locked or buckled together.
For single combat, thou shalt buckle with me. Shakespeare.
Yet thou, they say, for marriage dost provide;
Is this an age to buckle with a bride? Dryden.
BUCKLER. n. f. [buccler, Welch; bouclier, Fr.]
A shield; a defensive weapon buckled on the arm.
He took my arms, and while I forc'd my way,
Through troops of foes, which did our passage stay;
My buckler o'er my aged father cast,
Still fighting, still defending as I past. Dryden.
This medal compliments the emperor as the Romans did dictator Fabius, when they called him the buckler of Rome. Addison.
To BUCKLER. v. a. [from the noun.] To support; to defend.
Fear not, sweet wench, they shall not touch

rum*, Lat.] A plant. Miller.
BUCKLICK. adj. buwicksu, from buwicksu, a cowherd.] Pastoral.
BUD. n. f. [bouton, Fr.] The first shoot of a plant; a gem.
Be as thou wast wont to be,
See as thou wast want to be;
Dian's bud o'er Cupid's flower,
Hath such force and blessed power. Shakespeare.
Writers say, as the most forward bud
Is eaten by the canker ere it blow,
Even so by love the young and tender wit
Is turn'd to folly, blasting in the bud,
Losing his verdure even in the prime. Shakespeare.
When you the flow'rs for Chloe twine,
Why do you to her garland join
The meanest bud that falls from mine? Prior.
Infects wound the tender buds, with a long hollow trunk, and deposit an egg in the hole, with a sharp corroding liquor, that causeth a swelling in the leaf, and closeth the orifice. Bentley.
To BUD. v. n. [from the noun.]
2. To put forth young shoots, or gems.

BUF

Bud forth as a rose growing by the brook of the field. Ecclesiasticus.
2. To rise as a gem from the stalk.
There the fruit, that was to be gathered from such a conflux, quickly budded out. Clarendon.
Heav'n gave him all at once, then snatch'd away,
Ere mortals all his beauties could survey;
Just like that flower that buds and withers in a day. Dryden.
Tho' lab'ring yokes on their own necks they fear'd,
And felt for budding horns on their smooth fore-heads rear'd. Dryden's Silenus.

move off the place: a low word.
All your prisoners are
In the lime grove, which weatherfends your cell,
They cannot budge till your release. Shakespeare.
The mouse ne'er shunn'd the cat, as they did budge
From rascals worse than they. Shakespeare.
I thought th' hadst scorn'd to budge
For fear. Hudibras.
BUDGE. adj. [of uncertain etymology.] Surly;
stiff; formal.
O foolishness of men! that lend their ears
To those budge doctors of the stoick fur. Milton.
BUDGE. n. f. The dressed skin or fur of lambs.
Diet.
BU'DGER. n. f. [from the verb.] One that moves or stirs from his place.
Let the first budger die the other's slave,
And the gods doom him after. Shakespeare.
BU'DGET. n. f. [bogette, French.]
1. A bag, such as may be easily carried.
If tinkers may have leave to live,
And bear the fowlkin budget;
Then my account I well may give,
And in the stocks avouch it. Shakespeare.
Sir Robert Clifford, in whose bosom, or budget, most of Perkin's secrets were laid up, was come into England. Bacon.
His budget with corruptions cramm'd,
The contributions of the damn'd. Swift.
2. It is used for a store, or stock.
It was nature, in fine, that brought off the cat, when the fox's whole budget of inventions failed him. L'Estrange.
BUFF. n. f. [from buffalo.]
1. A sort of leather prepared from the skin of the buffalo; used for waist belts, pouches, and military accoutrements.
A rosy chain of rheums, a visage rough,
Deform'd, unfeatur'd, and a skin of buff. Dry.
2. The skins of elks and oxen dressed in oil, and prepared after the same manner as that of the buffalo.
3. A military coat made of thick leather, so that a blow cannot easily pierce it.
A fiend, a fairy, pitiless and rough,
A wolf, nay worse, a fellow all in buff. Shakespeare.
To BUFF. v. a. [buffe, Fr.] To strike: it is a word not in use.
There was a shock,
To have buff'd out the blood
From ought but a block. Ben Jonson.
BU'FFALO. n. f. [Ital.] A kind of wild ox.
Become the unworthy browse
Of buffaloes, salt goats, and hungry cows. Dryden.
BU'FFET. n. f. [uffeto, Ital.] A blow with the fist; a box on the ear.
O, I could divide myself, and go to buffets, for moving such a dish of skimmed milk with so honourable an action. Shakespeare.
A man that fortune's buffets and rewards
Hast ta'en with equal thanks. Shakespeare.
Go, buff'd coward, lest I run upon thee,
And with one buffet lay thy structure low. Milton.

BUG

Round his hollow temples, and his ears,
His buckler beats; the fun of Neptune stunn'd
With these repeated buffets, quits the ground. Dry.
BU'FFET. n. f. [buffette, Fr.] A kind of cupboard; or set of shelves, where plate is set out to shew, in a room of entertainment.
The rich buffet well-coloured serpents grace,
And gaping Tritons spew to wash your face. Pope.
To BU'FFET. v. a. [from the noun.] To strike with the hand; to box; to beat.
Why, woman, your husband is in his old lunes again; he so buffets himself on the forehead, crying, Peer out, peer out! that any madness I ever yet beheld, seem'd but tameness. Shakespeare.
Our ears are cudgell'd; not a word of his
But buffets better than a fist of France. Shakespeare.
The torrent roar'd, and we did buffet it
With lusty sinews; throwing it aside. Shakespeare.
Instantly I plung'd into the sea,
And buffeting the billows to her rescue,
Redeem'd her life with half the loss of mine. Ormsby.
To BU'FFET. v. n. To play a boxing-match.
If I might buffet for my love, I could lay on like a butcher. Shakespeare's Henry V.

A man with a large head, like a buffalo; dull;
stupid; foolish.
BU'FFOON. n. f. [buffon, French.]
1. A man whose profession is to make sport, by low jests and antick postures; a jackpudding.
No prince would think himself greatly honoured, to have his proclamation canvassed on a publick stage, and become the sport of buffoons. Watts.
2. A man that practises indecent raillery.
It is the nature of drolls and buffoons, to be insolent to those that will bear it, and slavish to others. L'Estrange.
The bold buffoon, when'er they tread the green,
Their motion mimicks, but with jest obscene. Garth.
BU'FFOONERY. n. f. [from buffoon.]
1. The practice or art of a buffoon.
Courage, in an ill-bred man, has the air, and escapes not the opinion of brutality; learning becomes pedantry, and wit buffoonery. Locke.
2. Low jests; ridiculous pranks; scurrilous mirth. Dryden places the accent, improperly, on the first syllable.
Where publick ministers encourage buffoonery, it is no wonder if buffoons set up for publick ministers. L'Estrange.
And whilst it lasts, let buffoonery succeed,
To make us laugh; for never was more need. Dry.
BUG. n. f. A stinking insect bred in old household stuff. In the following passage, wings are erroneously ascribed to it.
Yet let me flap this bug with gilded wings,
This painted child of dirt, which stinks and stings. Pope.
BUG. } n. f. [It is derived by some from BU'GBEAR: } big, by others from bug; bug, in Welch, has the same meaning.] A frightful object; a walking spectre, imagined to be seen; generally now used for a false terror to frighten babes.
Each trembling leaf and whistling wind they hear,
As ghastly bug their hair on end does rear,
Yet both do strive their fearfulness to feign. Fairy Q.
Sir, spare your threats;
The bug which you would fright me with, I seek. Shakespeare.
Hast not slept to-night? would he not, naughty man, let it sleep? a bugbear take him. Shakespeare.
We have a horror for uncouth monsters; but, upon experience, all these bugs grow familiar and easy to us. L'Estrange.

Such bugbear thoughts, once got into the tender minds of children, sink deep, so as not easily, if ever, to be got out again. Locke.

To the world, no bugbear is so great, As bug of figure, and a small estate. Pope.

BUGGINESS. n. f. [from buggy.] The state of being infected with bugs.

BUGGY. adj. [from bug.] Abounding with bugs.

Giaffer, their leader, desperately fighting amongst the foremost of the janizaries, was at once shot with two bullets and slain.

And as the built, so different is the fight; Their mounting shot is on our fails design'd:

Deep in their hulls our deadly bullets light, And through the yielding planks a passage find.

BULLION. n. f. [billon, Fr.] Gold or silver in the lump, unwrought, uncoined.

B U L

The balance of trade must of necessity be returned in coin or bullion.

A second multitude, With wondrous art found out the maffy ore, Severing each kind, and scum'd the bullion dross.

Bullion is silver whose workmanship has no value. And thus foreign coin hath no value here for its stamp, and our coin is bullion in foreign dominions.

In every vessel there is stowage for immense treasures, when the cargo is pure bullion.

BULLITION. n. f. [from bullio, Lat.] The act or state of boiling.

There is to be observed in these dissolutions, which will not easily incorporate, what the effects are, as the bullition, the precipitation to the bottom, the ejaculation towards the top, the suspension in the midst, and the like.

BULLOCK. n. f. [from bull.] A young bull.

Why, that's spoken like an honest drover: so they sell bullocks.

Some drive the herds; here the fierce bullock scorns

Th' appointed way, and runs with threat'ning horns.

Until the transportation of cattle into England was prohibited, the quickest trade of ready money here was driven by the sale of young bullocks.

BULLY. n. f. [Skinner derives this word from burly, as a corruption in the pronunciation; which is very probably right: or from bulky, or bull-eyed; which are less probable. May it not come from bull, the pope's letter, implying the infolence of those who came invested with authority from the papal court?] A noisy, blustering, quarrelling fellow: it is generally taken for a man that has only the appearance of courage.

Mine host of the garter!—What says my bully rock? Speak scholarly and wisely.

All on a sudden the doors flew open, and in comes a crew of roaring bullies, with their wench- es, their dogs, and their bottles.

'Tis so ridiculous, but so true withal, A bully cannot sleep without a brawl.

A scolding hero is, at the worst, a more tolerable character than a bully in petticoats.

The little man is a bully in his nature, but, when he grows choleric, I confine him till his wrath is over.

To BULLY. v. a. [from the noun.] To overbear with noise or menaces.

As courtship, pleasant jest, and courtesy, As bumbast, and as lining to the time.

BUMP. n. f. [perhaps from bum; as being prominent.] A swelling; a protuberance.

It had upon its brow a bump as big as a young cockrel's stone; a perilous knock, and it cried bitterly.

Not though his teeth are beaten out, his eyes Hang by a string, in bumps his forehead rises.

To BUMP. v. a. [from bombus, Lat.] To make a loud noise, or bomb. [See BOMB.] It is applied, I think, only to the bitter.

Then to the water's brink she laid her head, And as a bittour bumps within a reed,

To thee alone, O lake, she said—

BUMPER. n. f. [from bump.] A cup filled till the liquor swells over the brims.

Places his delight All day in playing bumpers, and at night Reels to the bawds.

BUMPKIN. n. f. [This word is of uncertain etymology; Henslow derives it from pumpkin, a kind of worthless gourd, or melon. This seems harsh; yet we use the word cabbage-head in the same sense. Bump is used amongst us for a knob, or lump; may not bumpkin be much the same with clodpole, loggerhead, block, and blockhead?] An awkward heavy rustick; a country lout.

The poor bumpkin, that had never heard of such delights before, blessed herself at the change of her condition.

A heavy bumpkin, taught with daily care, Can never dance three steps with a becoming air.

i. e. the last or lowest of the profession. Davies.]
A bad workman; a clumsy performer; a man without skill.

Painters, at the first, were such bunglers, and so rude, that, when they drew a cow or a hog, they were fain to write over the head what it was; otherwise the beholder knew not what to make of it. Peacham on Drawing.

Hard features every bungler can command;
To draw true beauty thews a master's hand. Dry.

A bungler thus, who scarce the nail can hit,
With driving wrong will make the pannel split.
Swift.

BUNGLINGLY. adv. [from bungling.] Clumsily;
awkwardly.

piece of cork or wood floating on the water, tied to a weight at the bottom.

The fishermen, that walk upon the beach,
Appear like mice; and yon tall anchoring bark
Diminish'd to her cock; her cock a buoy, Almost too small for sight. Shakespeare's K. Lear.

BUR

Like buoys, that never sink into the flood,
On learning's surface we but lie and nod.

TO BUOY. v. a. [from the noun. Pope's Dunciad
in both.] To keep afloat; to bear up.

All art is used to sink episcopacy, and launch presbytery in England; which was lately buoyed up in Scotland, by the like artifice of a covenant.

The water which rises out of the abyfs, for the supply of springs and rivers, would not have stopped at the surface of the earth, but marched directly up into the atmosphere, wherever there was heat enough in the air to continue its ascent, and buoy it up. Woodward's Natural History.

TO BUOY. v. n. To float; to rise by specifick lightness.

Rising merit will buoy up at last.

BUOYANCY. n. f. [from buoyant.] The quality of floating.

All the winged tribes owe their flight and buoyancy to it. Derham's Physico-Theology.

BUOYANT. adj. [from buoy.] Floating; light;
that which will not sink. Dryden uses the word, perhaps improperly, for something that has density enough to hinder a floating body from sinking.

I swam with the tide, and the water under me was buoyant. Dryden.

His once so vivid nerves,
So full of buoyant spirit, now no more Inspire the course. Thomson's Autumn.

BUR, BOUR, BOR, come from the Sax. bur, an inner-chamber, or place of shade and retire-

• BUT. conjunct. [but, butan, Saxon.]

1. Except.

An emission of immaterial virtues we are a little doubtful to propound, it is so prodigious:
but that it is so constantly avouched by many. Bacon.

Who can it be, ye gods! but perjur'd Lycon?
Who can inspire such storms of rage, but Lycon?
Where has my sword left one so black, but Lycon?

Smith.

Your poem hath been printed, and we have no objection but the obscurity of several passages, by our ignorance in facts and persons. Swift.

2. Except then; had it not been that: in this sense we now write but that. See sense 11.

And but infirmity,

Which waits upon worn times, hath something seiz'd

His with'd ability, he had himself
The lands and waters measur'd. Shakespeare.

3. Yet; nevertheless. It sometimes only enforces yet.

Then let him speak, and any that shall stand without shall hear his voice plainly; but yet made extreme sharp and exile, like the voice of puppets: and yet the articulate sounds of the words will not be confounded. Bacon.

Our wants are many, and grievous to be born,
but quite of another kind. Swift.

4. The particle which introduces the minor of a syllogism; now.

If there be a liberty and possibility for a man to kill himself to-day, then it is not absolutely necessary that he shall live till to-morrow; but there is such a liberty, therefore no such necessity.

Bramhall against Hobbes.

God will one time or another make a difference between the good and the evil. But there is little or no difference made in this world: therefore there must be another world, wherein this difference shall be made. Watts's Logic.

5. Only; nothing more than.

If my offence be of mortal kind,
That not my service, past or present sorrows,
Can ransom me into his love again;

But to know so, must be my benefit. Shakespeare.

What nymph for'er his voice but hears,
Will be my rival, though she have but ears.

Ben Jonson.

No, Aurengzebe, you merit all my heart,
And I'm too noble but to give a part. Dryden.

Did but men consider the true notion of God, he would appear to be full of goodness. Tillotson.

If we do but put virtue and vice in equal circumstances, the advantages of ease and pleasure will be found to be on the side of religion. Tillotson.

The mischiefs or harms that come by play, inadvertency, or ignorance are not at all, or but very gently, to be taken notice of. Locke on Education.

If a reader examines Horace's Art of Poetry, he will find but very few precepts in it, which he may not meet with in Aristotle. Addison.

Prepar'd I stand: he was but born to try
The lot of man, to suffer and to die. Pope.

6. Than.

The full moon was no sooner up, and shining in all its brightness, but he opened the gate of Paradise. Guardian.

7. But that; without this consequence that.

Frosts that constrain the ground,
Do seldom their usurping power withdraw,
But raging floods pursue their hasty hand. Dryd.

8. Otherwise than that.

It cannot be but nature hath some director, of infinite power, to guide her in all her ways. Hooker.

Who shall believe,
But you misuse the reverence of your place? Shakespeare.

9. Not more than; even.

A genius so elevated and unconfined as Mr.
Cowley's, was but necessary to make Pindar speak English. Dryden.

10. By any other means than.

Bereave but now I left; whom pin'd with pain,
Her age and anguish from these rites detain. Dryden.

It is evident, in the instance I gave but now, the consciousness went along. Locke.

Out of that will I cause those of Cyprus to mutiny: whose qualification shall come into no true taste again, but by transplanting of Cassio. Shakespeare.

11. If it were not for this; that; if it were not that. Obsolete.

Believe me, I had rather have lost my purse
Full of cruzades. And, but my noble Moor
Is true of mind, and made of no such baseness,

As jealous creatures are, it were enough
To put him to ill-thinking. Shakespeare.

I here do give thee that with all my heart,
Which but thou hast already, with all my heart
I would keep from thee. Shakespeare.

12. However; howbeit: a word of indeterminate connection.

I do not doubt but I have been to blame;
But, to pursue the end for which I came,
Unite your subjects first, then let us go,
And pour their common rage upon the foe. Dryden.

13. It is used after no doubt, no question, and such words, and signifies the same with that. It sometimes is joined with that.

They made no account, but that the navy should be absolutely master of the seas. Bacon.

I fancied to myself a kind of ease in the change of the paroxysm; never suspecting but that the humour would have wasted itself. Dryden.

There is no question but the king of Spain will reform most of the abuses. Addison.

14. That. This seems no proper sense in this place.

It is not therefore impossible, but I may alter the complexion of my play, to restore myself into the good graces of my fair critics. Dryden.

15. Otherwise than. Obsolete.

I should sin
To think but nobly of my grandmother. Shakespeare.

16. A particle by which the meaning of the foregoing sentence is bounded or restrained;
only.

Thus fights Ulysses, thus his fame extends,
A formidable man, but to his friends. Dryden.

17. A particle of objection; yet it may be objected: it has sometimes yet with it.

But yet, madam—
I do not like but yet; it does allay
The good precedence; fie upon but yet!

But yet as a jaylour, to bring forth
Some monstrous malefactor. Shakespeare.

Must the heart then have been formed and constituted, before the blood was in being? But here again the substance of the heart itself is most certainly made and nourished by the blood, which is conveyed to it by the coronary arteries. Bentley.

18. But for; without; had not this been.

Rath man! forbear, but for some unbelief,
My joy had been as fatal as my grief. Waller.

Her head was bare,
But for her native ornament of hair,
Which in a simple knot was ty'd above. Dryden.

When the fair boy receiv'd the gift of right,
And, but for mischief, you had dy'd for spite. Dryden.

BUT. n. f. [bout, French.] A boundary.

But, if I ask you what I mean by that word, you will answer, I mean this or that thing, you cannot tell which; but if I join it with the words in construction and sense, as, but I will not, a but of wine, but and boundary, the ram will but, shoot at but, the meaning of it will be as ready to you as any other word. Holder.

BUT. n. f. [In sea language.] The end of any plank which joins to another on the outside of a ship, under water. Harris.

BUT-END. n. f. [from but and end.] The blunt end of any thing; the end upon which it rests.

The reserve of foot galled their foot with feveral volleys, and then fell on them with the but-ends of their muskets. Clarendon.

Thy weapon was a good one when I wielded
it, but the but-end remains in my hands. Arbutnot.

Some of the soldiers accordingly pushed them forwards with the but-ends of their pikes, into my reach. Swift.

BUTCHER. n. f. [boucher, Fr.]

1. One that kills animals to sell their flesh.

The shepherd and the butcher both may look upon one sheep with pleasing conceits. Sidney.

Hence he learnt the butcher's guile,
How to cut your throat, and smile;
Like a butcher doom'd for life,
In his mouth to wear his knife. Swift.

2. One that is delighted with blood.

Honour and renown are bestowed on conquerors, who, for the most part, are but the great butchers of mankind. Locke.

To BUTCHER. v. a. [from the noun.] To kill;
to murder.

In suffering thus thy brother to be slaughter'd,
Thou shewest the naked pathway to thy life,
Teaching stern murder how to butcher thee. Shakespeare.

Uncharitably with me have you dealt,
And shamefully by you my hopes are butcher'd. Shakespeare.

The poison and the dagger are at hand to butcher
a hero, when the poet wants brains to save him. Dryden.

BUTCHERS-BROOM, or KNEEHOLLY. n. f.

[ruscus, Lat.]

The roots are sometimes used in medicine, and

The canker galls the infants of the spring,

Too oft before their button, be disclos'd. Shakspeare.

BUTTON. n. f. [button, Fr.] The sea urchin, which is a kind of crabfish that has prickles instead of feet. Ainsworth.

To BUTTON. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To dress ; to clothe.

One whose hard heart is button'd up with steel. Shakspeare.

He gave his legs, arm, and breast, to his ordinary servant, to button and dress him. Wotton.

2. To fasten with buttons ; as, he buttons his coat.

BUTTONHOLE. n. f. [from button and hole.]

The loop in which the button of the clothes is caught.

Let me take you a buttonhole lower. Shakspeare.

I'll please the maids of honour, if I can :

Without black velvet breeches what is man ?

I will my skill in buttonholes display,

And brag, how oft I shift me every day. Brampton.

BUTTRESS. n. f. [from aboutir, Fr.]

1. A prop ; a wall built to support another wall, and standing out.

No jutting frize,

Butress, not coigne of vantage, but this bird,

Hath made his pendant bed, and procreant cradle. Shakspeare.

Fruit trees, set upon a wall against the sun, between elbows or butresses of stone, ripen more than upon a plain wall. Bacon.

But we inhabit a weak city here,

Which butresses and props but scarcely bear. Dryden.

2. A prop ; a support.

It will concern us to examine the force of this plea, which our adversaries are still setting up against us, as the ground pillar, and butress of the good old cause of nonconformity. South.

To BUTTRESS. v. a. [from the noun.] To prop ; to support.

BUTWINK. n. f. The name of a bird. Di.

VOL. I. N° 7.

F f

BUTY-

B U Z

BUTYRACEOUS. adj. [butyrum, Lat. butter.] Having the qualities of butter.

Chyle has the same principles as milk; a viscosity from the caseous parts, and an oiliness from the butyrous parts.

BUTYROUS. adj. [butyrum, Latin.] Having the properties of butter.

Its oily red part is from the butyrous parts of chyle.

BUXOM. adj. [bucrum, Saxon, from buxan, to bend. It originally signified obedient, as John d. Trevisa, a clergyman, tells his patron, that he is obedient and buxom to all his commands. In an old form of marriage used before the reformation, the bride promised to be obedient and buxom in bed and at board; from which expression, not well understood, its present meaning seems to be derived.]

1. Obedient; obsequious.

He did tread down, and disgrace all the English, and set up and countenance the Irish; thinking thereby to make them more tractable and buxom to his government.

He, with broad fails,

Winnow'd the buxom air.

2. Gay; lively; brisk.

I'm born

Again a fresh child of the buxom morn,

Heir of the sun's first beams.

Zephyr with Aurora playing,

As he met her once a maying,

Fill'd her with thee, a daughter fair,

So buxom, blithe, and debonnaire.

Sturdy swains,

In clean array, for rustick dance prepare,

Mixt with the buxom damsels hand in hand.

3. Wanton; jolly.

Almighty Jove descends, and pours

Into his buxom bride his fruitful show'rs.

She feign'd the rites of Bacchus! cry'd aloud,

And to the buxom god the virgin vow'd.

BUXOMLY. adv. [from buxom.] Wantonly; amorously.

BUXOMNESS. n. f. [from buxom.] Wantonnefs; amoroufness.

TO BUY. v. a. preter. I bought; I have bought; [biegean, Sax.]

1. To purchase; to acquire by paying a price; to obtain for money, or something equivalent; to procure by sale, not gift or theft.

They must buy up no corn growing within twelve miles of Geneva, that so the filling of their magazines may not prejudice their market.

2. To procure some advantage by something that deserves it, or at some price.

I have bought

Golden opinions from all forts of people.

Pent to linger

But with a grain a day, I would not buy

Their mercy at the price of one fair word.

Pleasure with praise, and danger they would buy,

And with the foe that would not only fly.

3. To regulate by money: in this sense it has particles annexed.

You, and all the kings of Christendom, Are led so grossly by this meddling priest, Dreading the curse that money may buy out.

What pitiful things are power, rhetorick, or riches, when they would terrify, dissuade, or buy off conscience?

TO BUY. v. n. To treat about a purchase.

I will buy with you, sell with you, talk with you, walk with you, and so following.

BUYER. n. f. [from to buy.] He that buys; a purchaser.

When a piece of art is set before us, let the first caution be, not to ask who made it, lest the fame of the author do captivate the fancy of the buyer.

TO BUZZ. v. a. [buzzen, Teut. to growl. Junius.]

1. To hum; to make a noise like bees, flies, or wasps.

B Y

And all the chamber filled was with flies, Which buzzed all about, and made such found,

That they encumber'd all men's ears and eyes,

Like many swarms of bees assembled round.

1. Here be more wasps, that buzz about his nose,

Will make this sting the sooner.

For still the flowers ready stand,

One buzzes round about,

One lights, one tastes, gets in, gets out.

What though no bees around your cradle flew,

Nor on your lips distill'd their golden dew;

Yet have we oft discover'd, in their stead,

A swarm of drones that buzz'd about your head.

We join, like flies and wasps, in buzzing about wit.

2. To whisper; to prate to.

There is such confusion in my pow'rs,

As after some oration fairly spoke

By a beloved prince, there doth appear

Among the buzzing multitude.

3. To found heavy and low.

Herewith arose a buzzing noise among them, as if it had been the rustling found of the sea afar off.

To Buzz. v. a. To whisper; to spread secretly.

Where doth the world thrust forth a vanity,

That is not quickly buzz'd into his ears?

I will buzz abroad such prophecies,

That Edward shall be fearful of his life.

Did you not hear

A buzzing of a separation

Between the king and Catherine?

They might buzz and whisper it one to another, and, tacitly withdrawing from the presence of the apostles, they then lift their voices, and noise it about the city.

Buzz. n. f. [from the verb.] A hum; a whisper; a talk.

The hive of a city or kingdom is in best condition

when there is least noise or buzz in it.

Where I found the whole outward room in a buzz of politicks.

BUZZARD. n. f. [bisard, Fr.]

1. A degenerate or mean species of hawk.

More pity that the eagle should be mawl'd,

While kites and buzzards prey at liberty.

The noble buzzard ever pleas'd me best;

Of small renown, 'tis true: for, not to lie,

We call him but a hawk by courtesy.

2. A blockhead; a dunce.

Those blind buzzards, who, in late years, of wilful maliciousness, would neither learn themselves, nor could teach others any thing at all.

BUZZER. n. f. [from buzz.] A secret whifperer.

Her brother is in secret come from France,

And wants not buzzers to infect his ear

With petulant speeches of his father's death.

BY. prep. [bi, big, Saxon.]

1. It notes the agent.

The Moor is with child by you, Launcelot.

The grammar of a language is sometimes to be carefully studied by a grown man.

Death's what the guilty fear, the pious crave,

Sought by the wretch, and vanquish'd by the brave.

2. It notes the instrument, and is commonly used after a verb neuter, were with would be put after an active; as, he killed her with a sword;

he died by a sword.

But by Pelides' arms when Hector fell,

He chose Aeneas, and he chose as well.

3. It notes the cause of any effect.

I view, by no presumption led,

Your revels of the night.

By woe the soul to daring action steals,

By woe in plaintive patience it excels.

4. It notes the means by which any thing is performed, or obtained.

You must think, if we give you any thing, we hope to gain by you.

B Y

Happier! had it suffic'd him to have known Good by itself, and evil not at all.

The heart knows that by itself, which nothing in the world besides can give it any knowledge of,

We obtain the knowledge of a multitude of propositions by sensation and reflection.

5. It shews the manner of an action.

I have not patience; she consumes the time

In idle talk, and owns her false belief:

Seize her by force, and bear her hence unheard.

This fight had more weight with him, as by good luck not above two of that venerable body were fallen asleep.

By chance, within a neighbouring brook,

He saw his branching horns, and alter'd look.

6. It has a signification, noting the method in which any successive action is performed with regard to time or quantity.

The best for you, is to re-examine the cause, and to try it even point by point, argument by argument, with all the exactness you can.

We are not to stay all together, but to come by him where he stands, by ones, by twos, and by threes.

He calleth them forth by one, and by one, by the name, as he pleaseth, though seldom the order be inverted.

The captains were obliged to break that piece of ordnance, and by pieces to carry it away, that the enemy should not get so great a spoil.

Common prudence would direct me to take them

all out, and examine them one by one.

Others will soon take pattern and encouragement by your building; and so house by house, street by street, there will at last be finished a magnificent city.

Explor'd her, limb by limb, and fear'd to find

So rude a gripe had left a livid mark behind.

Thus year by year they pass, and day by day,

Till once 'twas on the morn of cheerful May,

The young Emilia—

I'll gaze for ever on thy godlike father,

Transplanting one by one into my life,

His bright perfections, till I shine like him.

Let the blows be by pauses laid on.

7. It notes the quantity had at one time.

Bullion will sell by the ounce for six shillings and five-pence unclipped money.

What we take daily by pounds, is at least of as much importance as what we take seldom, and only by grains and spoonfuls.

The North, by myriads, pours her mighty sons;

Great nurse of Goths, of Alans, and of Huns.

8. At, or in; noting place: it is now perhaps only used before the words sea, or water, and land. This seems a remnant of a meaning now little known. By once expressed situation; as, by west, westward.

We see the great effects of battles by sea; the battle of Actium decided the empire of the world.

Arms, and the man, I sing, who, forc'd by fate,

Expell'd, and exil'd, left the Trojan shore;

Long labours both by sea and land he bore.

I would have fought by land, where I was stronger:

You hinder'd it; yet, when I fought at sea,

Forfook me fighting.

By land, by water, they renew their charge.

9. According to; noting permission.

It is lawful, both by the laws of nature and nations, and by the law divine, which is the perfection of the other two.

10. According to; noting proof.

The present, or like, system of the world cannot possibly have been eternal, by the first proposition; and, without God, it could not naturally, nor fortuitously, emerge out of chaos, by the third proposition.

The faculty, or desire, being infinite by the preceding proposition, may contain or receive both these. Cheyne.

11. After; according to; noting imitation or conformity.

The gospel gives us such laws, as every man, that understands himself, would chuse to live by.

In the divisions I have made, I have endeavoured, the best I could, to govern myself by the diversity of matter. Locke.

This ship, by good luck, fell into their hands at last, and served as a model to build others by.

12. From; noting ground of judgment, or comparison.

Thus, by the musick, we may know, When noble wits a hunting go, Thro' groves that on Parnassus grow. Walker.

By what he has done, before the war in which he was engaged, we may expect what he will do after a peace. Dryden.

The son of Hercules he justly seems, By his broad shoulders and gigantic limbs. Dryd. Who's that stranger? By his warlike port, His fierce demeanour, and erected look, He's of no vulgar note. Dryden.

Judge the event By what has pass'd. Dryden.

The punishment is not to be measured by the greatness or smallness of the matter, but by the opposition it carries and stands in, to that respect and submission that is due to the father. Locke.

By your description of the town, I imagine it to lie under some great enchantment. Pope.

By what I have always heard and read, I take the strength of a nation— Swift.

13. It notes the sum of the difference between two things compared.

CAL'IFF. n. f. [Cattivo, Ital. a slave; whence it came to signify a bad man, with some implication of meanness; as knave in English, and far in Latin; so certainly does slavery destroy virtue. Hume.

A slave and a scoundrel are signified by the same words in many languages.] A mean villain; a despicable knave: it often implies a mixture of wickedness and misery.

Vile califf, vial of dread and despair,
Unworthy of the common breathed air;
Why livest thou, dead dog, a longer day,
And dost not unto death thyself prepare? Spenser.

C A L

'Tis not impossible
But one, the wicked'st califf on the ground
May seem as shy, as grave, as just, as absolute,
As Angelo. Shakspeare.

The wretched califf, all alone,
As he believ'd, began to moan,
And tell his story to himself. Hudibras.

CAKE. n. f. [cuch, Teutonic.]

Calcedonius is of the agate kind, and of a misty grey, clouded with blue; or with purple. Woodward on Fossils.

To CALCINATE. See To CALCINE.

In hardening, by baking without melting, the heat hath these degrees; first, it indurates, then maketh fragile, and, lastly, it doth calcinate. Bacon's Natural History.

CALCINATION. n. f. [from calcine, calcination, Fr.] Such a management of bodies by fire, as renders them reducible to powder; wherefore it is called chymical pulverization. This is the next degree of the power of fire beyond that of fusion; for when fusion is longer continued, not only the more subtle particles of the body itself fly off, but the particles of fire likewise insinuate themselves in such multitudes, and are so blended through its whole substance, that the fluidity, first caused by the fire, can no longer subsist. From this union arises a third kind of body, which, being very porous and brittle, is easily reduced to powder; for, the fire having penetrated every where into the pores of the body, the particles are both hindered from mutual contract, and divided into minute atoms. Quina.

Divers residences of bodies are thrown away, as soon as the distillation or calcination of the body that yieldeth them is ended. Boyle.

This may be affected, but not without a calcination, or reducing it by art into a subtle power. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CALCINATORY. n. f. [from calcinate.] A vessel used in calcination.

To CALCINE. [v. a. calcinare, Fr. from calx, Lat.]

1. To burn in the fire to a calx, or friable substance. See CALCINATION.

The

The solids seem to be earth, bound together with some oil; for if a bone be calcined, so as the least force will crumble it, being emersed in oil, it will grow firm again. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. To burn up.

Fury disputes that union have calcined,
Almost as many minds as men we find. Denham.

To CALCINE. v. n. To become a calx by heat.
This chrysal is a pellucid fissile stone, clear as water, and without colour, enduring a red heat without losing its transparency, and, in a very strong heat, calcining without fusion.

And for that lethargy was there no cure,
But to be cast into a calenture.

Denham.

So, by a calenture misled,
The mariner with rapture fees,
On the smooth ocean's azure bed,
Enamell'd fields, and verdant trees;
With eager haste, he longs to rove
In that fantastic scene, and thinks
It must be some enchanted grove;
And in he leaps, and down he sinks.

Swift.

CALF. n. f. calves in the plural. [calv, Saxon; kalf, Dutch.]

1. The young of a cow.

The colt hath about four years of growth; and so the fawn, and so the calf.

Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Acofta tells us of a fowl in Peru, called condore, which will kill and eat up a whole calf at a time.

Wilkins.

Ah! Blouzelind, I love thee more by half
Than does their fawns, or cows the new-fall'n calf.

Gay.

2. Calves of the lips, mentioned by Hosea, signify sacrifices of praise and prayers, which the captives of Babylon addressed to God, being no longer in a condition to offer sacrifices in his temple.

Gabriel.

Turn to the Lord, and say unto him, Take away all iniquity, and receive us graciously: so will we render the calves of our lips. Hosea, xiv. 2.

3. By way of contempt and reproach applied to a human being; a dolt; a stupid wretch.

When a child haps to be got,
That after proves an idiot;
When folk perceive it thriveth not,
Some silly doating brainless calf,
That understands things by the half,
Says, that the fairy left the oaf,
And took away the other. Drayton's Nym.

4. The thick, plump, bulbous part of the leg. [kalf, Dutch.]

Into her legs I'd have love's issues fall,
And all her calf into a gouty small. Suckling.

The calf of that leg blistered. Wifeman's Surgery.

CALIX. n. f. [Latin.] A cup; a word used in botany; as, the calix of a flower.

To CALK. v. a. [from calage, Fr. hemp, with which leaks are stopp'd; or from cale, Sax. the keel. Skinner.] To stop the leaks of a ship.

There is a great error committed in the manner of calking his majesty's ships; which being done with rotten oakum, is the cause they are leaky.

Raleigh's Essay.

So here some pick out bullets from the side;
Some drive old oakum through each seam and rift;
Their left-hand does the calking iron guide,
The rattling mallet with the right they lift.

Dryden.

CALKER. n. f. [from calk.] The workman that stops the leaks of a ship.

The ancients of Gebal, and the wife men thereof, were in thee thy calkers; all the ships of the sea, with their mariners, were in thee to occupy thy merchandize.

Ezek. xxvii. 9.

CALKING. n. f. A term in painting, used where the backside is covered with black lead, or red chalk, and the lines traced through on a waxed plate, wall, or other matter, by passing lightly over each stroke of the design with a point, which leaves an impression of the colour on the plate or wall.

Chamberi.

To CALL. v. a. [calo, Lat. kalder, Danish.]

1. To name, to denominate.

And God called the light day, and the darknes he called night.

Gen. i. 5.

2. To summon, or invite, to or from any place, thing, or person.

It is often used with local particles; as, up, down, in, out, off.

Be not amazed, call all your senses to you, defend my reputation, or bid farewell to your good life for ever.

Shakespeare.

Why came not the slave back to me when I called him?

Shakespeare's King Lear.

Are you call'd forth from out a world of men,
To slay the innocent?

Shakespeare's Richard III.

Lodronius, that famous captain, was called up.

and

and told by his servants, that the general was fled.
Kneller's History.

Or call up him that left half told
The story of Cambucan bold. Milton.
Drunkennes calls off the watchmen from their towers; and then evils proceed from a loose heart, and an untied tongue. Taylor's Holy Living.
The soul makes use of her memory, to call to mind what she is to treat of. Duppa's Rules to Devotion.

Such fine employments our whole days divide,
The salutations of the morning tide
Call up the sun; those ended, to the hall
We wait the patron, here the lawyers bawl. Dryden.

Then, by consent, abstain from further spoils,
Call off the dogs, and gather up the spoils. Addison.
By the pleasures of the imagination or fancy, I mean such as arise from visible objects, when we call up their ideas into our minds by paintings, statues, or descriptions. Addison's Spectator.

Why dost thou call my sorrows up afresh!
My father's name brings tears into my eyes. Addison's Cato.

I am called off from public dissertations, by a domestic affair of great importance. Tatler.

Æschylus has a tragedy entitled Perse, in which the shade of Darius is called up. Broom on the Odyssey.
The passions call away the thoughts, with incessant importunity, toward the object that excited them. Watts.

3. To convoke; to summon together.
Now call we our high court of parliament. Shakespeare.

The king being informed of much that had passed that night, sent to the lord mayor to call a common council immediately. Clarendon.

4. To summon judicially.
The king had sent for the earl to return home, where he should be called to account for all his misdeeds. Clarendon.

Once a day, especially in the early years of life and study, call yourselves to an account, what new ideas, what new proposition or truth, you have gained. Watts.

5. To summon by command.
In that day did the Lord God of hosts call to weeping, and to mourning, and to baldness, and to girding with sackcloth. Isaiah xxii. 12.

6. In the theological sense, to inspire with ar-dours of piety, or to summon into the church.
Paul, a servant of Jesus Christ, called to be an apostle, separated unto the gospel of God. Romans i. 1.

7. To invoke; to appeal to.
I call God for a record upon my soul, that, to spare you, I came not as yet unto Corinth. 2 Cor. i. 23.

8. To appeal to.
When that lord perplexed their counsels and designs, with inconvenient objections in law, the authority of the lord Manchester, who had trod
the same paths, was still called upon. Clarendon.

9. To proclaim; to publish.
Nor ballad-finger, plac'd above the croud,
Sings with a note so thrilling, sweet, and loud,
Nor parish clerk, who calls the psalm so clear. Gay.

10. To excite; to put in action; to bring into view.
He swells with angry pride,
And calls forth all his spots on every side. Rowley.

See Dionysius Homer's thoughts refine,
And call new beauties forth from ev'ry line. Pope.

11. To stigmatize with some opprobrious denomination.
Deafness unqualifies men for all company, except friends; whom I can call names, if they do not speak loud enough. Swift to Pope.

12. To call back. To revoke; to retract.
He also is wise, and will bring evil, and will not call back his words; but will arise against the house of the evil doers; and against the help of them that work iniquity. Isaiah xxxi. 2.

13. To call for. To demand; to require; to claim.
Madam, his majesty doth call for you,
And for your grace, and you, my noble lord. Shakespeare.

You see, how men of merit are sought after;
the underfervor may sleep, when the man of action is called for. Shakespeare.
Among them he a spirit of phrensy sent,
Who hurt their minds,
And urg'd you on, with mad desire,
To call in haste for their destroyer. Milton's Agonistes.

For master, or for servant, here to call,
Was all alike, where only two were all. Dryden's Fables.

He commits every sin that his appetite calls for,
or perhaps his constitution or fortune can bear. Rogers.
14. To call in. To resume money at interest.
Horace describes an old usurer, as so charmed with the pleasures of a country life, that, in order to make a purchase, he called in all his money; but what was the event of it? why, in a very few days after, he put it out again. Addison's Spectator.

15. To call in. To resume any thing that is in other hands.
If clipped money be called in all at once, and stopped from passing by weight, I fear it will stop trade. Locke.

Neither is any thing more cruel and oppressive in the French government, than their practice of calling in their money, after they have sunk it very low, and then coining it anew, at a higher value. Swift.

16. To call in. To summon together; to invite.
The heat is past, follow me no farther now;
Call in the powers, good cousin Westmoreland. Shakespeare.

He fears my subjects loyalty,
And now must call in strangers. Denham's Sophy.

17. To call over. To read aloud a list or muster-roll.
To CALL. v. n.

1. To stop without intention of staying. This meaning probably rose from the custom of denoting one's presence at the door by a call; but it is now used with great latitude. This sense is well enough preserved by the particles on or at;
but it is forgotten, and the expression made barbarous by in.

2. To make a short visit.
And, as you go, call on my brother Quintus,
And pray him, with the tribunes, to come to me. Ben Jonson.

He ordered her to call at his house once a-week, which she did for some time after, when he heard
no more of her. Temple.
That I might begin as near the fountain-head as possible, I first of all called in at St. James's. Addison's Spectator.

We called in at Morge, where there is an artificial port. Addison on Italy.

3. To call on. To solicit for a favour, or a debt.
I would be loth to pay him before his day;
what need I be so forward with him, that calls not on me? Shakespeare's Henry IV.

4. To call on. To repeat solemnly.
Thrice call upon my name, thrice beat your breast,
And hail me thrice to everlasting rest. Dryden.

The Athenians, when they lost any men at sea, went to the shores, and, calling thrice on their names, raised a cenotaph, or empty monument, to their memories. Broom on the Odyssey.

5. To call out. To challenge; to summon to fight.
When their sov'reign's quarrel calls 'em out,
His foes to mortal combat they defy. Dryden's Virgil.

6. To call upon. To implore; to pray to.
Call upon me in the day of trouble; I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me. Psalms i. 15.

CALL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A vocal address of summons or invitation.
But death comes not at call, justice divine
Mends not her slowest pace, for pray'rs or cries. Milton.

2. Requisition authoritative and public.
It may be feared, whether our nobility would contentedly suffer themselves to be always at the call, and to stand to the sentence of a number of mean persons. Hooker's Preface.

3. Divine vocation; summons to true religion.
Yet he at length, time to himself best known,
Rememb'ring Abraham, by some wondrous call,
May bring them back repentant and sincere. Milton.

4. A summons from heaven; an impulse.
How justly then will impious mortals fall,
Whose pride would soar to heav'n without a call? Rafson.

Those who to empire by dark paths aspire,
Still plead a call to what they most desire. Dryden.
St. Paul himself believed he did well, and that he had a call to it, when he persecuted the christians, whom he confidently thought in the wrong;
but yet it was he, and not they, who were mistaken. Locke.

5. Authority; command.
Oh! Sir, I wish he were within my call, or your's. Denham.

6. A demand; a claim.
Dependence is a perpetual call upon humanity,
and a greater incitement to tenderness and pity,
than any other motive whatsoever. Addison's Spectator.

7. An instrument to call birds.
For those birds or beasts were made from such pipes or calls, as may express the several tones of those creatures, which are represented. Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

8. Calling; vocation; employment.
Now, through the land, his cure of souls he stretch'd,
And, like a primitive apostle preach'd:
Still cheerful, ever constant to his call;
By many follow'd, lov'd by most, admir'd by all. Dryden.

9. A nomination.
Upon the sixteenth was held the serjeants feast at Ely place, there being nine serjeants of that call. Bacon.

CALLAT. } n. f. A trull.
CALLET. }
He call'd her whore: a beggar, in his drink,
Could not have laid such terms upon his caller. Shakespeare.

CALLING. n. f. [from call.]
1. Vocation; profession; trade.
If God has interwoven such a pleasure with our ordinary calling, how much superiour must that be, which arises from the survey of a pious life? Surely, as much as Christianity is nobler than a trade. South.
We find ourselves obliged to go on in honest industry in our callings. Rogers.
I cannot forbear warning you against endeavouring at wit in your sermons; because many of your callings have made themselves ridiculous
by attempting it. Swift.
I left no calling for this idle trade,
No duty broke, no father disobey'd. Pope.
2. Proper station, or employment.
The Gauls found the Roman senators ready to die with honour in their callings. Swift.
3. Class of persons united by the same employment or profession.
It may be a caution to all christian churches and magistrates, not to impose celibacy on whole callings, and great multitudes of men or women, who cannot be supposed to have the gift of con-tinence. Hammer.
4. Divine vocation; invitation or impulse to the true religion. Gar

Give all diligence to make your calling and election sure.

2 Peter i. 10.

St. Peter was ignorant of the calling of the Gentiles.

Hakewill on Providence.

CALLIPERS. n. f. [Of this word I know not the etymology, nor does any thing more probable occur, than that, perhaps, the word is corrupted from clippers, instruments with which any thing is clipped, inclosed or embraced.] Compasses with bowed flanks.

Callipers measure the distance of any round, cylindrical, conical body, so that, when workmen use them, they open the two points to their described width, and turn so much stuff off the intended place, till the two points of the callipers fit just over their work. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

CALLOSITY. n. f. [callositas, Fr.] A kind of swelling without pain, like that of the skin, by hard labour; and therefore, when wounds, or the edges of ulcers, grow so, they are said to be callous.

Quincy.

The surgeon ought to vary the diet of his patient, as he finds the fibres loosen too much, are too flaccid, and produce funguses, or as they harden and produce callosities; in the first case, wine and spirituous liquors are useful, in the last hurtful.

Arbutnot on Diet.

CALLOUS. adj. [callus, Lat.]

1. Indurated; hardened; having the pores shut up.

In progress of time, the ulcers became finuous and callos, with induration of the glands. Wijeman.

2. Hardened; insensible.

Licentiousness has so long passed for sharpness of wit, and greatness of mind, that the conscience is grown callos.

L'Estrange.

The wretch is drench'd too deep,

His soul is stupid, and his heart asleep:

Fatten'd in vice, so callos and so gross,

He sins, and fees not, senseless of his loss. Dryden.

CALLOUSNESS. n. f. [from callos.]

1. Hardness; induration of the fibres.

The oftener we use the organs of touching, the more of these scales are formed, and the skin becomes the thicker, and so a callosness grows upon it.

Gibney.

2. Insensibility.

If they let go their hope of everlasting life with willingness, and entertain final perdition with exultation, ought they not to be esteemed destitute of common sense, and abandoned to a callosness and numbness of soul?

Bentley.

CALLOW. adj. Unfledged; naked; without feathers.

Bursting with kindly rapture, forth disclos'd

Their callos young. Milton.

Then as an eagle, who, with pious care,

Was beating widely on the wing for prey,

To her now silent airy does repair,

And finds her callos infants forc'd away. Dryden.

How in small flights they know to try their young.

And teach the callos child her parent's song. Prior.

CALLUS. n. f. [Latin.]

1. An induration of the fibres.

2. The hard substance by which broken bones are united.

CALM. adj. [calme, Fr. kalm, Dutch.]

1. Quiet; serene; not stormy; not tempestuous; applied to the elements.

Calm was the day, and, through the trembling air,

Sweet breathing Zephyrus did softly play

A gentle spirit, that lightly did allay

Hot Titan's beams, which then did glisten fair.

Spenser.

So shall the sea be calm unto us.

Jonah.

2. Undisturbed; unruffled; applied to the passions.

It is no ways congruous, that God should be frightning men into truth, who were made to be wrought upon by calm evidence, and gentle methods of persuasion. Atterbury.

The queen her speech with calm attention hears,

Her eyes restrain the silver-streaming tears. Pope.

CALM. n. f.

1. Serenity; stillness; freedom from violent motion: used of the elements.

It seemeth most agreeable to reason, that the waters rather stood in a quiet calm, than that they moved with any raging or overbearing violence.

Raleigh.

Every pilot

Can steer the ship in calms; but he performs

The skilful part, can manage it in storms. Denham.

Nor God alone in the still calm we find,

He mounts the storm, and walks upon the wind.

Pope.

2. Freedom from disturbance; quiet; repose: applied to the passions.

Great and strange calms usually portend the most violent storms; and therefore, since storms and calms do always follow one another, certainly, of the two, it is much more eligible to have the storm first, and the calm afterwards: since a calm before a storm is commonly a peace of a man's own making; but a calm after a storm, a peace of God's.

South.

To CALM. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To still; to quiet.

Neptune we find busy in the beginning of the Æneis, to calm the tempest raised by Æolus.

Dryden.

2. To pacify; to appease.

Jesus, whose bare word checked the sea, as much exerts himself in silencing the tempests, and calming the intestine storms within our breasts.

Decay of Piety.

Those passions, which seem somewhat calmed, may be entirely laid asleep, and never more awakened.

Atterbury.

He will'd to stay,

The sacred rites and hecatombs to pay,

And calm Minerva's wrath. Pope.

CALMER. n. f. [from calm.] The person or thing which has the power of giving quiet.

Angling was, after tedious study, a rest to his mind, a cheerer of his spirits, a diverter of sadnesses, a calmer of unquiet thoughts, a moderator of passions, a procurer of contentedness. Walton.

CALMLY. adv. [from calm.]

1. Without storms, or violence; serenely.

In nature, things move violently to their place, and calmly in their place; so virtue in ambition is violent, in authority settled and calm.

Bacon.

His curled brows

Frown on the gentle stream, which calmly flows.

Denham.

2. Without passions; quietly.

The nymph did like the scene appear,

Serenely pleasant, calmly fair;

Soft fell her words, as flew the air. Prior.

CALMNESS. n. f. [from calm.]

1. Tranquility; serenity; not storminess.

While the steep horrid roughness of the wood Strives with the gentle calmness of the flood.

Denham.

2. Mildness; freedom from passion.

Sir, 'tis fit

You have strong party, to defend yourself

By calmness, or by absence: all's in danger. Shakespeare.

I beg the grace,

You would lay by those terrors of your face;

Till calmness to your eyes you first restore,

I am afraid, and I can beg no more. Dryden.

CALMY. adj. [from calm.] Calm; peaceful.

Not used.

And now they nigh approached to the sted,

Where as those mermaides dwelt: it was a still

And calmy bay, on the one side sheltered

With the broad shadow of an hoary hill.

Fairy Queen.

The ground about was thick sown with caltrops, which very much incommoded the shoeless Moors.

Dr. Addison's Account of Tangiers.

2. A plant common in France, Spain, and Italy, where it grows among corn, and is very troublesome; for the fruit being armed with strong prickles, run into the feet of the cattle. This is certainly the plant mentioned in Virgil's Georgick, under the name of tribulus.

Miller.

To CALVE. v. n. [from calf.]

1. To bring a calf: spoken of a cow.

When she has calv'd then set the dam aside,

And for the tender progeny provide. Dryden.

2. It is used metaphorically for any act of bringing forth; and sometimes of men, by way of reproach.

I would they were barbarians, as they are, Though in Rome litter'd; not Romans; as they are not;

Though calv'd in the porch o' th' capitol. Shakespeare.

The grassy clods now calv'd, now half appear'd

The tawny lion, pawing to get free

His hinder parts. Milton.

CALVES-SNOUT. [antirrhinum.] A plant. Snap-dragon.

CALVILLE. n. f. [French.] A sort of apple.

To CALUMNIATE. v. n. [calumniar, Lat.] To accuse falsely; to charge without just ground.

Beauty, wit, high birth, desert in service,

Love, friendship, charity, are subject all

To envious and calumniating time. Shakespeare.

He mixes truth with falsehood, and has not forgotten the rule of calumniating strongly, that something may remain.

Dryden's Fables, Preface.

Do I calumniate thou ungrateful Vanoc!—

Perfidious Prince! Is it a calumny

To say, that Gwendolen betroth'd to Yver,

Was by her father first assur'd to Valens. A. Phillips.

To CALUMNIATE. v. a. To slander.

One trade or art, even those that should be the most liberal, make it their business to disdain and calumniate another. Spratt.

CALUMNIATION. n. f. [from calumniate.] That which we call calumniation, is a malicious and false representation of an enemy's words or actions, to an offensive purpose. Ayliffe.

CALUMNIATOR. n. f. [from calumniate.] A forger of accusation; a slanderer.

He that would live clear of the envy and hatred of potent calumniators, must lay his finger upon his mouth, and keep his hand out of the ink-pot.

L'Estrange.

At the same time that Virgil was celebrated by Gallus, we know that Bavius and Mævius were his declared foes and calumniators. Addison.

CALUMNIOUS. adj. [from calumny.] Slandrous;

falsely reproachful.

Virtue itself 'scapes not calumnious strokes. Shakespeare.

With calumnious art

Of counterfeited truth, thus held their ears. Milton.

CALUMNY. n. f. [calumnia, Lat.] Slander;

false charge; groundless accusation: with against,

or sometimes upon, before the person accused.

Be thou as chaste as ice, as pure as snow,

Thou shalt not escape calumny. Shakespeare.

It is a very hard calumny upon our soil or climate,

to affirm, that so excellent a fruit will not grow here. Temple.

CALX. n. f. [Latin.] Any thing that is rendered reducible to powder by burning.

Gold, that is more dense than lead, resists peremptorily all the dividing power of fire; and will not be reduced into a calx, or lime, by such operation as reduces lead into it. Digby.

Confed'rate in the cheat, they draw the throng, And cambrick handkerchiefs reward the song. Gay.

CAMEL. The preterite of To come. Till all the pack came up, and ev'ry hound Tore the sad huntsman, growling on the ground.

CAMEL. n. f. [camelus, Lat.] An animal very common in Arabia, Judea, and the neighbouring countries. One sort is large, and full of flesh, and fit to carry burdens of a thousand pound weight, having one bunch upon its back. Another have two bunches upon their backs, like a natural saddle, and are fit either for burdens, or men to ride on. A third kind is leaner, and of a smaller size, called dromedaries, because of their swiftness; which are generally used for riding by men of quality.

Camels have large solid feet, but not hard. Camels will continue ten or twelve days without eating or drinking, and keep water a long time in their stomach, for their refreshment.

Patient of thirst and toil, Son of the desert! even the camel feels, Shot through his wither'd heart, the fiery blast.

CAMELOPARD. n. f. [from camelus and pardus, Lat.] An Abyssinian animal, taller than an elephant, but not so thick. He is so named, because he has a neck and head like a camel; he is spotted like a pard, but his spots are white upon a red ground. The Italians call him giaraffa.

CAMELOT. } n. f. [from camel.]

1. A kind of stuff originally made by a mixture of silk and camel's hair; it is now made with wool and silk.

This habit was not of camel's skin, nor any coarse texture of its hair, but rather some finer weave of camelot, grograin, or the like; in as much as these stuffs are supposed to be made of the hair of that animal.

2. Hair cloth. Meantime the pastor shears their hoary beards, And eases, of their hair, the laden herds:

Their camels warm in tents the foldier hold, And shield the shivering mariner from cold. Dryd.

CAMP'PHIRE TREE. n. f. [camphora, Lat.]

There are two sorts of this tree; one is a native of the ile of Borneo, from which the best camphire is taken, which is supposed to be a natural exudation from the tree, produced in such places where the bark of the tree has been wounded or cut. The other sort is a native of Japan, which Dr. Kemper describes to be a kind of bay, bearing black or purple berries, and from whence the inhabitants prepare their camphire, by making a simple decoction of the root and wood of this tree, cut into small pieces; but this sort of camphire is, in value, eighty or an hundred times less than the true Bornean camphire.

It is oftener used for the gum of this tree.

CAMPHORATE. adj. [from camphora, Lat.] Impregnated with camphire.

By shaking the saline and camphorate liquors together, we easily confounded them into one high coloured liquor.

Parfled upon with many a folded plight.

CAN. n. f. [canne, Sax.] A cup; generally a cup made of metal, or some other matter than earth.

I hate it as an unfill'd can. Shakespeare.

One tree, the coco, afforded stuff for housing, clothing, shipping, meat, drink, and can. Grew.

His empty can, with ears half worn away, Was hung on high, to boast the triumph of the day.

To CAN. v. n. [connen, Dutch. It is sometimes, though rarely, used alone; but is in constant use as an expression of the potential mood; as, I can do, thou canst do, I could do, thou couldst do. It has no other terminations.]

To be able; to have power.

In place there is licence to do good and evil, whereof the latter is a curse; for, in evil, the best condition is not to will; the second not to can. Baron.

O, there's the wonder!

Mecenas and Agrippa, who can most With Cæsar, are his foes.

He can away with no company, whose discourse goes beyond what claret and dissoluteness inspires.

2. It expresses the potential mood; as, I can do it.

If the can make me blest! the only can: Empire and wealth, and all she brings beside, Are but the train and trappings of her love. Dryd.

3. It is distinguished from may, as power from permission; I can do it; it is in my power: I may do it; it is allowed me: but, in poetry, they are confounded.

4. Can is used of the person with the verb active, where may is used; of the thing, with the verb passive; as, I can do it; it may or can be done.

CANA'ILLE. n. f. [French.] The lowest people; the dregs; the lees; the offscouring of the people: a French term of reproach.

CAN'DLE. n. f. [candela, Lat.]

1. A light made of wax or tallow, surrounding a wick of flax or cotton.

Here burns my candle out, ay, here it dies,

Which, while it lasted, gave king Henry light. Shakspere.

We see that wax candles last longer than tallow candles, because wax is more firm and hard. Bacon's Natural History.

Take a child, and, setting a candle before him, you shall find his pupil to contract very much, to exclude the light, with the brightness whereof it would otherwise be dazzled. Ray.

2. Light, or luminary.

By these blest candles of the night,
Had you been there, I think you would have begg'd
The ring of me, to give the worthy doctor. Shaksp.

CAN'DLEBERRY TREE. See SWEET-WILLOW; of which it is a species.

CAN'DLEHOLDER. n. f. [from candle and hold.]

1. He that holds the candle.

2. He that remotely assists.

Let wantons, light of heart,
Tickle the senseless rufhes with their heels;
For I am proverb'd with a grandfire phrase,
To be a candleholder, and look on. Shakspere.

CAN'DLELIGHT. n. f. [from candle and light.]

1. The light of a candle.

In darkness candlelight may serve to guide men's steps, which, to use in the day, were madnes. Hooker.

Before the day was done, her work she sped,
And never went by candlelight to bed. Dryden's Fables

The boding owl
Steals from her private cell by night,
And flies about the candlelight. Swift.

Such as are adapted to meals, will indifferently serve for dinners or suppers, only distinguishing between daylight and candlelight. Swift.

I shall find him coals and candlelight. Molineux to Locke.

CAN'DLEMAS. n. f. [from candle and mass.] The feast of the Purification of the Blessed Virgin, which was formerly celebrated with many lights in churches.

The harvest dinners are held by every wealthy man, or, as we term it, by every good liver, between Michaelmas and Candlemas. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

There is a general tradition in most parts of Europe, that intereth the coldness of the succeeding winter, upon shining of the sun upon Candlemas day. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Come Candlemas nine years ago the dy'd,
And now lies bury'd by the yew-tree side. Gay.

CAN'DLESTICK. n. f. [from candle and stick.]

The instrument that holds candles.

The horsemen sit like fixed candlesticks,
With torch-staves in their hands; and their poor jades

Lob down their heads. Shakspere.

These countries were once christian, and members of the church, and where the golden candlesticks did stand. Bacon.

I know a friend, who has converted the essays of a man of quality, into a kind of fringe for his candlesticks. Addison.

CAN'DLESTUFF. n. f. [from candle and stuff.]

Any thing of which candles may be made; kitchen-stuff, grease; tallow.

By the help of oil, and wax, and other candle-stuff, the flame may continue, and the wick not burn. Bacon.

One that consumes candles; a spendthrift.

Patch grief with proverbs, make misfortune drunk

With candlewasters. Shakspere.

CAN'DOCK. n. f. a weed that grows in rivers.

Let the pond lie dry six or twelve months, both to kill the water-weeds, as water-lilies, candocks, reate, and bulrushes, and also, that as these die for want of water, so grafs may grow on the pond's bottom. Walton.

CAN'DOUR. n. f. [candor, Lat.] Sweetness of temper; purity of mind; openness; ingenuity; kindness.

He should have so much of a natural candour and sweetness, mixed with all the improvement of learning, as might convey knowledge with a sort of gentle insinuation. Watts.

To CAN'DY. v. a. [probably from candare, a word used in later times for to whiten.]

1. To conserve with sugar, in such a manner as that the sugar lies in flakes, or breaks into spangles.

Should the poor be flatter'd?

No, let the candy'd tongue lick absurd pomp,
And crook the pregnant hinges of the knee,
Where thrift may follow fawning. Shakspere.

They have in Turkey confections like to candied conserves, made of sugar and lemons, or sugar and citrons, or sugar and violets, and some other flowers, and mixture of amber. Bacon.

With candy'd plantanes, and the juicy pine,
On choicest melons and sweet grapes they dine. Waller.

2. To form into congelations.

Will the cold brook,
Candied with ice, cawdle thy morning toast,
To cure thy o'er-night's surfeit? Shakspere.

3. To incrust with congelations.

Since when those frosts that winter brings,
Which candy every green,
Renew us like the teeming springs,
And we thus fresh are seen. Drayton.

To CAN'DY. v. n. To grow congealed.

CAN'DY Lion's foot. [catanance, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

CANE. n. f. [canna, Lat.]

1. A kind of strong reed, of which walking-staffs are made; a walking staff.

Shall I to please another wine sprung mind
Lose all mine own? God hath given me a measure Short of his cane and body: must I find
A pain in that wherein he finds a pleasure? Hortert.

The king thrust the captain from him with his cane; whereupon he took his leave, and went home. Hervey.

If the poker be out of the way, or broken, stir the fire with your master's cane. Swift.

2. The plant which yields the sugar.

This cane or reed grows plentifully both in the East and West Indies. Other reeds have their skin hard and dry, and their pulp void of juice; but the skin of the sugar cane is soft, and the spongy matter or pith it contains very juicy. It usually grows four or five feet high, and about half an inch in diameter. The stem or stalk is divided by knots a foot and a half a part. At the top it puts forth a number of long green tufted leaves, from the middle of which arise the flower and the seed. There are likewise leaves springing out from each knot; but these usually fall as the canes. They usually plant them in pieces cut a foot and a half below the top of the flower, and they are ordinarily ripe in ten months, though sometimes not till fifteen; at which time they are found quite full of a white succulent marrow, whence is expressed the liquor of which sugar is made. When ripe, they are cut, and carried in bundles to the mills, which consist of three wooden rollers, covered with steel plates. Chambers.

And the sweet liquor on the cane bestow,
From which prepar'd the luscious sugars flow.

3. A lance; a dart made of cane; whence the Spanish inigo de canas.

Abenamar, thy youth these sports has known,
Of which thy age is now spectator grown;
Judge-like thou sit'st to praise or to arraign,
The flying skirmish of the darted cane. Dryden.

4. A reed.
Food may be afforded to bees, by small canes or troughs conveyed into their hives.

Mortimer's Husbandry.
To CANE, v. a. [from the noun.] To beat with a walking staff.

CANICULAR, adj. [canicularis, Lat.] Belonging to the dog-star; as canicular, or dog-days.

In regard to different latitudes, unto some the canicular days are in the winter; as unto such as are under the equinoctial line; for, unto them, the dog-star ariseth, when the sun is about the tropick of Cancer, which season unto them is winter.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.
CANINE, adj. [caninus, Lat.]

1. Having the properties of a dog.
A kind of women are made up of canine particles: these are scolds, who imitate the animals out of which they were taken, always busy and barking, and snarl at every one that comes in their way. Addison.

2. Canine hunger, in medicine, is an appetite which cannot be satisfied.

It may occasion an exorbitant appetite of usual things, which they will take in such quantities, till they vomit them up like dogs, from whence it is called canine. Arbutnot.

CANISTER, n. f. [canistrum, Lat.]

1. A small basket.
White lilies in full canisters they bring,
With all the glories of the purple spring. Dryden.

2. A small vessel in which any thing, such as tea or coffee, is laid up.

CANKER, n. f. [cancer, Lat.] It seems to have the same meaning and original with cancer, but to be accidentally written with a k, when it denotes bad qualities in a less degree; or canker might come from chancre, Fr. and cancer from the Latin.

1. A worm that preys upon and destroys fruits.
And loathful idleness he doth detest.

The canker worm of every gentle breast. Sponser.
That which the locust hath left hath the canker worm eaten. Joel, i. 4.

Yet writers say, as in the sweetest bud
The eating canker dwells; so eating love
Inhabits in the finest wits of all. Shakespeare.

A huffing, shining, flatt'ring, cringing coward,
A canker worm of peace, was rais'd above him.

Orway.

2. A fly that preys upon fruits.
There be of flies, caterpillars, canker flies, and bear flies. Walton's Angler.

3. Any thing that corrupts or consumes.
It is the center and ruin of many men's estates, which, in process of time, breeds a publick poverty.

Bacon.
Sacrilege may prove an eating canker, and a consuming moth, in the estate that we leave them.

Atterbury.
No longer live the cankers of my court;
All to your several states with speed resort;
Waste in wild riot what your land allows,
There ply the early feast, and late carouse. Pope.

4. A kind of wild worthless rose; the dogrose.
To put down Richard, that sweet lovely rose,
And plant this thorn, this canker Bolingbroke.

Shakespeare.

Draw a cherry with the leaf, the shaft of a steeple, a single or canker rose. Peacbam.

5. An eating or corroding humour.
I am not glad, that such a fore of time
Should seek a plaister by a condemn'd revolt,
And heal th' inveterate canker of one wound,
By making many. Shakespeare.

6. Corrosion; virulence.
As with age his body uglier grows,
So his mind with cankers. Shakespeare.

7. A disease in trees. Dict.
To CANCKER, v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To grow corrupt; implying something venomous and malignant.

That cunning architect of canker'd guile,
Whom princes late displeasure left in bands,
For falsed letters, and suborned wile. Fairy Queen.

I will lift the downtrod Mortimer
As high i' th' air as this unthankful king,
As this ingrate this canker'd Bolingbroke. Shakes.

Or what the crows dire looking planet smite,
Or hurtful worm with canker'd venom bite. Milton.

To some new clime, or to thy native sky,
Oh! friendless and forsaken virtue, fly:
The Indian air is deadly to thee grown;
Deceit and canker'd malice rule thy throne. Dryden.

Let envious jealousy, and canker'd spite
Produce my actions to severest light,
And tax my open day, or secret night. Prior.

2. To decay by some corrosive or destructive principle.

Silvering will fully and canker more than gilding;
which, if it might be corrected with a little mixture of gold, will be profitable. Bacon.

To CANCKER, v. a.

1. To corrupt; to corrode.
Reftore to God his due in tithe and time:
A tithe purloin'd, cankers the whole estate. Herbert.

2. To infect; to pollute.
An honest man will enjoy himself better in a moderate fortune, that is gained with honour and reputation, than in an overgrown estate, that is cankered with the acquisitions of rapine and exaction.

Addison.
CANCKERBIT, particip. adj. [from canker and bit.]
Bitten with an envenomed tooth.

Know thy name is lost;
By treason's tooth baregawn and cankerbit. Shakes.

CANNABINE, adj. [cannabinus, Lat.] Dict.

CANNIBAL, n. f. An anthropophagite; a man-eater.

The cannibals themselves eat no man's flesh, of those that die of themselves, but of such as are slain. Bacon.

They were little better than cannibals, who do hunt one another; and he that hath most strength and swiftness, doth eat and devour all his fellows.

Davies on Ireland.

It was my hint to speak,
Of the cannibals that each other eat;
The anthropophagi. Shakespeare.

The captive cannibal, oppress'd with chains,
Yet braves his foes, reviles, provokes, disdain;
Of nature fierce, untameable, and proud;
He bids defiance to the gaping croud;
And spent at last, and speechless as he lies,
With fiery glances mocks their rage, and dies.

Granville.

If an eleventh commandment had been given,
Thou shalt not eat human flesh; would not these cannibals have esteem'd it more difficult than all the rest?

Bentley.
CANNIBALLY, adv. [from cannibal.] In the manner of a cannibal.

Before Corioli, he scotch'd him and notch'd him like a carbinado.—Had he been cannibally given,
he might have broiled and eaten him too. Shakesp.

CANNIPERS, n. f. [corrupted from callipers;
which see.]

The square is taken by a pair of cannipers, or two rulers clapped to the side of a tree, measuring the distance between them. Mortimer's Husbandry.

CANNON, n. f. [canon, Fr. from canna, Lat.
a pipe, meaning a large tube.]

1. A great gun for battery.

2. A gun larger than can be managed by the hand.

They are of so many sizes, that they decrease in the bore from a ball of forty-eight pounds to a ball of five ounces.

As cannons overcharg'd with double cracks,
So they redoubled strokes upon the foe. Shakesp.

He had left all the cannon he had taken; and now he sent all his great cannon to a garriſon.

Clarendon.

The making, or price, of these gunpowder instruments, is extremely expensive, as may be easily judged by the weight of their materials; a whole cannon weighing commonly eight thousand pounds; a half cannon, five thousand; a culverin, four thousand five hundred; a demi-culverin, three thousand; which, whether it be in iron or brass, must needs be very costly. Wilkins.

CANNON-BALL, n. f. [from cannon, ball, bullet, and shot.] The CANNON-BULLET, n. f. balls which are shot from great guns.

He reckons those for wounds that are made by bullets, although it be a cannon-shot. Wise man's Surgery.

Let a cannon-bullet pass through a room, it must strike successively the two sides of the room.

Locke.
To CANNONADE, v. n. [from cannon.] To play
the great guns; to batter or attack with great guns.

Both armies cannonaded all the ensuing day. Taylor.
To CANNONADE, v. a. To fire upon with cannon.

CANNONIER, n. f. [from cannon.] The engineer that manages the cannon.

Give me the cup;
And let the kettle to the trumpets speak,
The trumpets to the cannonier without,
The cannons to the heav'ns, the heav'ns to earth.

Shakespeare.

A third was a most excellent cannonier, whose good skill did much endamage the forces of the king. Hayward.

CANNOT, A word compounded of can and not:
noting inability.

I cannot but believe many a child can tell twenty,
long before he has any idea of infinity at all.

Locke.

CANOEA, n. f. A boat made by cutting the CANOE, n. f. trunk of a tree into a hollow vessel.

Others made rafts of wood, others devised the boat of one tree, called the canoa, which the Gauls, upon the Rhone, used in assisting the transportation of Hannibal's army. Raleigh.

In a war against Semiramis, they had four thousand monoxyla, or canoes of one piece of timber.

Arbutnot on Coins.

CANON, n. f. [νόμος.]

1. A rule; a law.

The truth is, they are rules and canons of that law, which is written in all men's hearts; the church had for ever, no less than now, stood bound to observe them, whether the apostle had mentioned them, or no. Hooker.

His books are almost the very canon to judge both doctrine and discipline by. Hooker.

Religious canons, civil laws are cruel,
Then what should war be? Shakespeare.

Canons in logic are such as these: every part of a division, singly taken, must contain less than the whole; and a definition must be peculiar and proper to the thing defined. Watts.

2. The laws made by ecclesiastical councils.

Canon law is that law, which is made and ordain'd in a general council, or provincial synod of the church.

Ayliffe.

These were looked on as lapsed persons, and great severities of penance were prescribed them, by the canons of Ancyra. Sittingfleet.

3. The books of Holy Scripture; or the great rule.

Canon also denotes those books of Scripture, which are received as inspired and canonical, to distinguish them from either profane, apocryphal, or disputed books. Thus we say, that Genesis is part of the sacred canon of the Scripture. Ayliffe.

4. A dignitary in cathedral churches.

For

For deans and canons, or prebends of cathedral churches, they were of great use in the church; they were to be of counsel with the bishop for his revenue, and for his government in causes ecclesiastical. Bacon.

Swift much admires the place and air,
And longs to be a canon there.

A canon! that's a place too mean:

No, doctor, you shall be a dean;

Two dozen canons round your stall,

And you the tyrant o'er them all.

5. Canons Regular. Such as are placed in monasteries. Swift.

6. Canons Secular. Lay canons, who have been, as a mark of honour, admitted into some chapters. Ayliff.

7. [Among chirurgians.] An instrument used in sewing up wounds. Diér.

CANON BIT. n. f. That part of the bit let into the horse's mouth.

A goodly person, and could manage fair,

His stubborn steed with canonbits,

Who under him did trample as the air. Spenser.

CANONESS. n. f. [canonissa, low Lat.]

There are in popish countries, women they call secular canonesses, living after the example of secular canons. Ayliff.

CANONICAL. adj. [canonicus, low Latin.]

1. According to the canon.

2. Constituting the canon.

Public readings there are of books and writings, not canonical, whereby the church doth also preach, or openly make known the doctrine of virtuous conversation. Hooker.

No such book was found amongst those canonical scriptures. Raleigh.

3. Regular; stated; fixed by ecclesiastical laws.

Seven times in a day do I praise thee, said David; from this definite number some ages of the church took their pattern for their canonical hours. Taylor.

4. Spiritual; ecclesiastical; relating to the church.

York anciently had a metropolitan jurisdiction over all the bishops of Scotland, from whom they had their consecration, and to whom they swore canonical obedience. Ayliff.

CANONICALLY. adv. [from canonical.] In a manner agreeable to the canon.

It is a known story of the friar, who, on a fasting day, bids his capon be carp, and then very canonically eat it. Government of the Tongue.

CANONICALNESS. n. f. [from canonical.] The quality of being canonical.

CANONIST. n. f. [from canon.] A man versed in the ecclesiastical laws; a professor of the canon law.

John Fisher, bishop of Rochester, when the king would have translated him from that poor bishoprick, he refused, saying, he would not forsake his poor little old wife; thinking of the fifteenth canon of the Nicene council, and that of the canonists, Matrimonium inter episcopum & ecclesiam esse contractum, &c. Camden's Remains.

Of whose strange crimes no canonist can tell, In what commandment's large contents they dwell. Pope.

CANONIZATION. n. f. [from canonize.] The act of declaring any man a saint.

It is very suspicious, that the interests of particular families, or churches have too great a sway in canonizations. Addison.

To CANONIZE. v. a. [from canon, to put into the canon, or rule for observing festivals.] To declare any man a saint.

The king, desirous to bring into the house of Lancaster, celestial honour, became suitor to pope Julius, to canonize king Henry VI. for a saint. Bacon.

By those hymns all shall approve,

Us canoniz'd for love. Donne.

They have a pope too, who hath the chief care of religion, and of canonizing whom he thinks fit, and thence have the honour of saints. Stillingfleet.

CANONRY. } n. f. [from canon.] An ecclesiastical benefice in some cathedral or collegiate church, which has a prebend, or a stated allowance out of the revenues of such church, commonly annexed to it. Ayliff.

CANOPYED. adj. [from canopy.] Covered with a canopy.

I sat me down to watch upon a bank,

With ivy canopy'd, and interwove

With flaunting honeysuckle. Milton.

CANOPY. n. f. [canopium, low Lat.] A covering of state over a throne or bed; a covering spread over the head.

She is there brought unto a paled green,

And placed under a stately canopy,

The warlike feats of both those knights to see. Fairy Queen.

Now spread the night her spangled canopy,

And summon'd every restless eye to sleep. Fairfax.

Nor will the raging fever's fire abate,

With golden canopies and beds of state. Dryden.

To CANOPY. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover with a canopy.

The birch, the myrtle, and the bay,

Like friends did all embrace;

And their large branches did display,

To canopy the place. Dryden.

CANOROUS. adj. [canorus, Lat.] Musical; tuneful.

Birds that are most canorous, and whose notes we most commend, are of little throats, and short. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CANT. n. f. [probably from cantus, Lat. implying the odd tone of voice used by vagrants; but imagined by some to be corrupted from quaint.]

1. A corrupt dialect used by beggars and vagabonds.

2. A particular form of speaking peculiar to some certain class or body of men.

I write not always in the proper terms of navigation, land service, or in the cant of any profession. Dryden.

If we would trace out the original of that flagrant and avowed impiety, which has prevailed among us for some years, we should find, that it owes its rise to that cant and hypocrisy, which had taken possession of the people's minds in the times of the great rebellion. Addison's Freeholder.

Astrologers, with an odd paltry cant, and a few pot-hooks for planets, to amuse the vulgar, have too long been suffered to abuse the world.

Swift's Predictions for the Year 1701.

A few general rules, with a certain cant of words, has sometimes set up an illiterate heavy writer, for a most judicious and formidable critic.

Addison's Spectator.

3. A whining pretension to goodness, in formal and affected terms.

Of promise prodigal, while pow'r you want, And preaching in the self-denying cant. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

4. Barbarous jargon.

The affectation of some late authours, to introduce and multiply cant words, is the most ruinous corruption in any language. Swift.

5. Auction.

Numbers of these tenants, or their descendants, are now offering to sell their leases by cant, even those which were for lives. Swift.

To CANT. v. n. [from the noun.] To talk in the jargon of particular professions, or in any kind of formal affected language, or with a peculiar and studied tone of voice.

Men cant about materia and forma; hunt chimeras by rules of art, or dress up ignorance in words of bulk or sound, which may stop up the mouth of enquiry. Glanville.

That uncouth affected garb of speech, or canting language rather, if I may so call it, which they have of late taken up, is the signal distinction and characteristic note of that, which, in that their new language, they call the godly party. Sanderfon.

The busy, subtle serpents of the law,
Did first my mind from true obedience draw;

While I did limits to the king prescribe,

And took for oracles that canting tribe. Rofcommon.

Unskill'd in schemes by planets to foreshow,
Like canting rascals, how the wars will go. Dryden's Juvenal.

CANTATA. n. f. [Ital.] A song.

CANTATION. n. f. [from canto, Lat.] The act of singing.

CANTER. n. f. [from cant.] A term of reproach for hypocrites, who talk formally of religion, without obeying it.

CANTERBURY BELLS. See BELFLOWER.

CANTERBURY GALLOP. [In horsemanship.] The hand gallop of an ambling horse, commonly called a canter: said to be derived from the monks riding to Canterbury on easy ambling horses.

CANTHARIDES. n. f. [Lat.] Spanish flies; used to raise blisters.

The flies, cantharides, are bred of a worm, or caterpillar, but peculiar to certain fruit trees; as are the fig tree, the pine tree, and the wild brier; all which bear sweet fruit, and fruit that hath a kind of secret biting or sharpness: for the fig hath a milk in it, that is sweet and corrosive; the pine apple hath a kernel that is strong and absterive. Bacon's Natural History.

CANTHUS. n. f. [Latin.] The corner of the eye. The internal is called the greater, the external the lesser canthus. Quincy.

A gentlewoman was seized with an inflammation and tumour in the great canthus, or angle of her eye. Wifemom.

CANTLE. n. f. [kant, Dut. a corner; sebantillon, Fr. a piece.] A piece with corners. Skinner.

See how this river comes, me cranking in, And cuts me from the belt of all my land,

A huge halfmoon, a monstrous canile out. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

To CANTLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut in pieces.

For four times talking, if one piece thou take, That must be cantled, and the judge go snack. Dryden's Juv.

CANTLET. n. f. [from cantle.] A piece; a fragment.

Nor shield, nor armour can their force oppose; Huge cantlets of his buckler strew the ground,

And no defence in his hor'd arms is found. Dryden.

CANTO. n. f. [Ital.] A book, or section of a poem.

Why, what would you do? —
—Make a willow cabin at your gate,
And call upon my soul within the house;

Write loyal cantos of contemned love. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

CANTON. n. f.

1. A small parcel or division of land.

Only that little canton of land, called the English pale, containing four small shires, did maintain a bordering war with the Irish, and retain the form of English government. Davies.

2. A small community, or clan.

The fame is the case of rovers by land; such, as yet, are some cantons in Arabia; and some petty kings of the mountains, adjacent to straits and ways. Bacon's Holy War.

To CANTON. v. a. [from the noun.] To divide into little parts.

Families shall quit all subjection to him, and canton his empire into less governments for themselves. Locke.

It would certainly be for the good of mankind, to have all the mighty empires and monarchies of the

the world *canton*ed out into petty states and principalities. Addison on Italy.

The late king of Spain, reckoning it an indignity to have his territories *canton*ed out into parcels by other princes, during his own life, and without his consent, rather chose to bequeath the monarchy entire to a younger son of France. Swift.

They canton out to themselves a little province in the intellectual world, where they fancy the light shines, and all the rest is in darkness. Watt on the Mind.

To CANTONIZE. v. a. [from canton.] To parcel out into small divisions.

Thus was all Ireland cantonized among ten persons of the English nation. Davies on Ireland.

Their canvass castles up they quickly rear, And build a city in an hour's space. Fairfax.

Where-e'er thy navy spreads her canvass wings, Homage to thee, and peace to all she brings. Waller.

With such kind passion hastes the prince to fight, And spreads his flying canvass to the sound;

Him whom no danger, were he there, could fright;

Now absent, every little noise can wound. Dryden.

Thou, Kheiler, long with noble pride, The foremost of thy art, hast vy'd

With nature in a generous strife, And touch'd the canvass into life. Addison.

2. The act of sifting voices, or trying them previously to the decisive act of voting: [from canvas, as it signifies a sieve.]

There be that can pack cards, and yet cannot play well: so there are some that are good in canvass and factions, that are otherwise weak men. Bacon.

To CANVASS. v. a. [Skinner derives it from cannabaster, Fr. to beat hemp; which being a very laborious employment, it is used to signify, to search diligently into.]

1. To sift; to examine: from canvass, a straining cloth.

I have made careful search on all hands, and *canvass*ed the matter with all possible diligence. Woodward.

2. To debate; to discuss.

The curs discovered a raw hide in the bottom of a river, and laid their heads together how to come at it: they *canvass*ed the matter one way and t'other, and concluded, that the way to get it, was to drink their way to it. L'Estrange.

To CANVASS. v. n. To solicit; to try votes previously to the decisive act.

Elizabeth being to resolve upon an officer, and being, by some that *canvass*ed for others, put in some doubt of that person she meant to advance, said, she was like one with a lantern, seeking a man. Bacon.

This crime of canvassing, or soliciting for church preferment, is, by the canon law, called simony. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

Several cases deserve greater punishment than many crimes that are capital among us.

Swift.

3. That which affects life.
In capital causes, wherein but one man's life is in question, the evidence ought to be clear; much more in a judgment upon a war, which is capital to thousands.

Bacon.

4. Chief; principal.
I will, out of that infinite number, reckon but some that are most capital, and commonly occur rent both in the life and conditions of private men.

Spenser on Ireland.

As to swerve in the least points, is error; so the capital enemies thereof God hateth; as his deadly foes, aliens, and, without repentance, children of endless perdition.

Hooker.

They do, in themselves, tend to confirm the truth of a capital article in religion.

Asterbury.

5. Chief; metropolitan.

This had been

Perhaps thy capital feat, from whence he had spread

All generations; and had hither come,
From all the ends of th' earth, to celebrate
And reverence thee, their great progenitor.

Paradise Lost.

CARDMATCH. n. f. [from card and match.] A match made by dipping pieces of card in melted sulphur.

Take care, that those may not make the most noise who have the least to sell; which is very observable in the venders of cardmatches. Addison.

CARDIUS. See THISTLE.

CARE. n. f. [care, Saxon.]

1. Solitude; anxiety; perturbation of mind; concern.

Or, if I would take care, that care should be,

C A R

For wit that scorn'd the world, and liv'd like me. Dryden.

Nor fullen discontent, nor anxious care,
Ev'n though brought thither, could inhabit there. Dryden.

Raise in your soul the greatest care of fulfilling the divine will. Wake's Preparation for Death.

2. Caution; often in the phrase to have a care. Well, sweet Jack, have a care of thyself. Shaksp.
The foolish virgins have taken no care for a further supply, after the oil, which was at first put into their lamps, was spent, as the wife had done. Tillotson.

Begone! the priest expects you at the altar.—
But, tyrant, have a care, I come not thither. A. Philips.

3. Regard; charge; heed in order to protection and preservation.

If we believe that there is a God, that takes care of us, and we be careful to please him, this cannot but be a mighty comfort to us. Tillotson.

4. It is a loose and vague word, implying attention or inclination, in any degree more or less: It is commonly used in the phrase to take care.
You come in such a time,

As if propitious fortune took a care
To swell my tide of joys to their full height. Dryden.

We take care to flatter ourselves with imaginary scenes and prospects of future happiness. Atterbury.

5. The object of care, of caution, or of love. O my poor kingdom, sick with civil blows!

When that my care could not withhold thy riots,
What wilt thou do when riot is thy care? Shaksp.

Flush'd were his cheeks, and glowing were his eyes:

Is the thy care? is the thy care? he cries. Dryden.

Your safety, more than mine, was then my care:
Left of the guide bereft, the rudder lost,

Your ship should run against the rocky coast
The wily fox,
Who lately filch'd the turkey's callow care. Gay's Trivia.

None taught the trees a nobler race to bear,
Or more improv'd the vegetable care. Pope.

To CARE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To be anxious or solicitous; to be in concern about any thing.

She care'd not what pain she put her body to,
since the better part, her mind, was laid under so much agony. Sidney.

As the Germans, both in language and manners, differed from the Hungarians, so were they always at variance with them; and therefore much care'd not, though they were by him subdued. Knolles's History of the Turks.

Well, on my terms thou wilt not be my heir;
If thou care'st little, less shall be my care. Dryden.

2. To be inclined; to be disposed: with for before nouns, or to before verbs.

Not careing to observe the wind,
Or the new sea explore. Waller.

The remarks are introduced by a compliment to the works of an author, who, I am sure, would not care for being praised at the expence of another's reputation. Addison.

Having been now acquainted, the two sexes did not care to part. Addison.

Great matters in painting never care for drawing people in the fashion. Speator.

3. To be affected with; to have regard to: with for.

You dote on her that cares not for your love. Shaksp.

There was an ape that had twins; she doated upon one of them, and did not much care for t'other. L'Estrange.

Where few are rich, few care for it; where many are so, many desire it. Temple.

CARECRAZED. adj. [from care and craze.] Broken with care and solicitude.

These both put off, a poor petitioner,
A carecraz'd mother of a many children. Shaksp.

To CAREEN. v. a. [cariner, Fr. from carina, Lat.] A term in the sea language. To lay a ves-

CAREER. n. f. [carriere, Fr.]

1. The ground on which a race is run; the length of a course.

They had run themselves too far out of breath, to go back again the same career. Sidney.

2. A course; a race.

What rein can hold licentious wickedness,
When down the hill he holds his fierce career? Shaksp.

3. Height of speed; swift motion.

It is related of certain Indians, that they are able, when a horse is running in his full career, to stand upright on his back.

Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

Practise them now to curb the turning steed,
Mocking the foe; now to his rapid speed

To give the rein, and, in the full career,
To draw the certain sword, or send the pointed spear. Prior.

4. Course of action; uninterrupted procedure.

Shall quips and sentences, and these paper bullets of the brain, awe a man from the career of his humour? Shaksp.

The heir of a blasted family has rose up, and promised fair, and yet, at length, a cross event has certainly met and stoppt him in the career of his fortune. South.

Knights in knightly deeds should persevere,
And still continue what at first they were;

Continue, and proceed in honour's fair career. Dryden.

To CAREER. v. n. [from the noun.] Running with swift motion.

With eyes, the wheels
Of beryl, and careering fires between. Milten.

CAREFUL. adj. [from care and full.]

1. Anxious; solicitous; full of concern.

The piteous maiden careful, comfortless,
Does throw out thrilling shrieks and shrieking cries. Spenser.

Martha, thou art careful, and troubled about many things. Luke, x. 41.

Welcome, thou pleasing slumber;
A while embrace me in thy leaden arms,
And charm my careful thoughts. Darb. Suphy.

2. Provident; diligent: with of or for.

Behold, thou hast been careful for us with all this care; what is to be done for thee? 2 Kings.

To cure their mad ambition, they were sent
To rule a distant province, each alone:

What could a careful father more have done? Dryden.

3. Watchful; cautious: with of.

It concerns us to be careful of our conversations. Ray.

4. Subject to perturbations; exposed to troubles; full of anxiety; full of solicitude.

By him that rais'd me to this careful height,
From that contented hap, which I enjoy'd. Shaksp.

CAREFULLY. adv. [from careful.]

1. In a manner that shews care.

Envy, how carefully does it look? how meagre and ill-complexioned? Celster.

2. Heedfully; watchfully; vigilantly; attentively.

You come most carefully upon your hour. Shaksp.

By considering him so carefully as I did before my attempt, I have made some faint resemblance of him. Dryden.

All of them, therefore, studiously cherished the memory of their honourable extraction, and carefully preserved the evidences of it. Auerboy.

3. Providently.

4. Cautiously.

CAREFULNESS. n. f. [from careful.] Vigilance; heedfulness; caution.

The death of Selymus was, with all carefulness, concealed by Ferhates. Knolles's History of the Turks.

CARELESSLY. adv. [from careless.] Negligently; inattentively; without care; heedlessly.

There

There he him found all carelessly display'd,
In secret shadow from the sunny ray. Fairy Q.
Not content to see,

That others write as carelessly as he. Waller.

CARELESSNESS. n. f. [from careless.] Heedlessness; inattention; negligence; absence of care; manner void of care.

For Coriolanus, neither to care whether they love or hate him, manifests the true knowledge he has in their disposition, and, out of his noble carelessness, lets them plainly see it. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Who, in the other extreme, only doth

Call a rough carelessness good fashion;
Whose cloak his spurs tear, or whom he spits on,
He cares not. Downe.

It makes us to walk warily, and tread sure, for fear of our enemies; and that is better, than to be flattered into pride and carelessness. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

The ignorance or carelessness of the servants can hardly leave the master disappointed. Temple.

I who at sometimes spend, at others spare,
Divided between careless and care. Pope.

CARELESS. adj. [from care.]

1. Without care; without solicitude; unconcerned; negligent; inattentive; heedless; regardless; thoughtless; neglectful; unheeding; unthinking; unmindful; with or about.

Knowing that if the worst befal them, they shall lose nothing but themselves; whereof they seem very careless. Spenser.

Nor lose the good advantage of his grace,

By seeming cold, or careless of his will. Shakespeare.

A woman the more curious she is about her face, is commonly the more careless about her house. Ben Jonson.

A father, unnaturally careless of his child, sells or gives him to another man. Locke.

2. Cheerful; undisturbed.

Thus wisely careless, innocently gay,
Cheerful he play'd. Pope.

In my cheerful morn of life,

When nurs'd by careless solitude I liv'd,

And sung of nature with unceasing joy,

Pleas'd have I wander'd through your rough domain. Thomson.

3. Unheeded; thoughtless; unconsidered.

The freedom of saying as many careless things as other people, without being so severely remarked upon. Pope.

4. Unmoved by; unconcerned at.

Careless of thunder from the clouds that break,
My only omens from your looks I take. Granville.

CARESS. v. a. [from carere, Fr. from carus, Lat.] To endear; to fondle; to treat with kindness.

If I can feast, and please, and carress my mind with the pleasures of worthy speculations, or virtuous practices, let greatness and malice vex and abridge me, if they can. South.

CARESS. n. f. [from the verb.] An act of endearment; an expression of tenderness.

He, she knew, would intermix

Grateful digressions, and solve high dispute

With conjugal caresses. Milton.

There are some men who seem to have brutal minds wrapt up in human shapes; their very caresses are crude and importune. L'Estrange.

After his successfour had publicly owned himself a Roman catholic, he began with his first caresses to the church party. Swift.

CARET. n. f. [from caret, Lat. there is wanting.] A note which shews where something interlined should be read.

CARGASON. n. f. [from cargason, Spanish.] A cargo. Not used.

My body is a cargason of ill humours.

Howell's Letters.

CARGO. n. f. [from charge, Fr.] The lading of a ship; the merchandise or wares contained and conveyed in a ship.

In the hurry of the shipwreck, Simonides was the only man that appeared unconcerned, notwithstanding that his whole fortune was at stake in the cargo. L'Estrange.

A ship, whose cargo was no less than a whole world, that carried the fortune and hopes of all posterity. Bacon's Theory.

This gentleman was then a young adventurer in the republic of letters, and just fitted out for the university with a good cargo of Latin and Greek. Addison.

CARICIOUS. Tumour. [from carica, a fig, Lat.] A swelling in the form of a fig.

CARIES. n. f. [Latin.] That rottenness which is peculiar to a bone. Quincy.

Fistulas of a long continuance, are for the most part, accompanied with ulcerations of the gland, and caries in the bone. Wifeman's Surgery.

CARIO-SITY. n. f. [from carious.] Rottenness.

This is too general, taking in all cariosity and ulcers of the bones. Wifeman's Surgery.

CARIOUS. adj. [from carious, Lat.] Rotten.

I discovered the blood to arise by a carious tooth. Wifeman.

CARK. n. f. [cearc, Saxon.] Care; anxiety; solicitude; concern; heedfulness. This word is now obsolete.

And Klaius taking for his youngling cark,
Left greedy eyes to them might challenge law,
Busy with oker did their shoulders mark. Sidney.

He down did lay

His heavy head, devoid of careful cark. Spenser.

TO CARK. v. n. [ceapcan, Saxon.] To be careful; to be solicitous; to be anxious. It is now very little used, and always in an ill sense.

I do find what a blessing is chanced to my life, from such muddy abundance of carking agonies, to states which still be adherent. Sidney.

What can be vainer, than to lavish out our lives in the search of trifles, and to lie carking for the unprofitable goods of this world? L'Estrange.

Nothing can supercede our own carkings and contrivances for ourselves, but the assurance that God cares for us. Decay of Piety.

CARLE. n. f. [ceopl, Saxon.]

1. A mean, rude, rough, brutal man. We now use charl.

The carle beheld, and saw his guest
Would safe depart, for all his subtle sleight. Spenser.

Answer, thou carle, and judge this riddle right,
I'll frankly own thee for a cunning wight. Gay's Pastorals.

The editor was a covetous carle, and would have his pearls of the highest price. Bentley.

2. A kind of hemp.

The fible to spin and the carl for her feed. Tupper.

CARLINE THISTLE. [from carlina, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

CARLINGS. n. f. [In a ship.] Timbers lying fore and aft, along from one beam to another; on these the ledges rest, on which the planks of the deck are made fast. Harris.

CARMAN. n. f. [from car and man.] A man whose employment it is to drive cars.

If the strong cane support thy wailing hand,
Chairmen no longer shall the wall command;
E'en sturdy carmen shall thy nod obey,
And rattling coaches stop to make thee way. Gay's Trivia.

CARMELITE. n. f. [from carmelite, Fr.] A sort of pear.

CARMINATIVE. adj. [supposed to be so called, as having vim carminis, the power of a charm.]

Carminatives are such things as dilute and relax at the same time, because wind occasions a spasm, or convulsion, in some parts. Whatever promotes insensible perspiration, is carminative; for wind is perishable matter retained in the body. Arbuthnot on Stomachs.

Carminative and diuretick
Will damp all passion sympathetick. Swift.

CARMINE. n. f. A bright red or crimson colour, bordering on purple, used by painters in miniature. It is the most valuable product of the cochineal maffick, and of an excessive price. Chambers.

CARNAGE. n. f. [from carnage, Fr. from carne, carnis, Lat.]

1. Slaughter; havoc; massacre.

He brought the king's forces upon them rather as to carnage than to fight, inasmuch as without any great loss or danger to themselves, the greatest part of the feditious were slain. Hayward.

2. Heaps of flesh.

Such a scent I draw
Of carnage, prey innumerable! and taste
The favour of death from all things there that live. Milton.

His ample maw with human carnage fill'd,
A milky deluge next the giant swill'd. Pope.

CARNAL. adj. [from carnal, Fr. carnalis, low Lat.]

1. Flethly; not spiritual.
Thou dost justly require us, to submit our understandings to thine, and deny our carnal reason, in order to thy sacred mysteries and commands. King Charles.

From that pretence.
Spiritual laws by carnal pow'r shall force
On every conscience. Milton.

Not such in carnal pleasure: for which cause,
Among the beasts no meat for thee was found. Milton.

A glorious apparition! had not doubt,
And carnal fear, that day dim'd Adam's eye. Milton.

He perceives plainly, that his appetite to spiritual things abates, in proportion as his sensual appetite is indulged and encouraged; and that carnal desires kill not only the desire, but even the power, of tasting purer delights. Atterbury.

2. Lustful; lecherous; libidinous.

This carnal cur
Preys on the issue of his mother's body. Shakespeare.

CARNALITY. n. f. [from carnal.]

1. Flethly lust; compliance with carnal desires.
If godly, why do they wallow and sleep in all the carnalities of the world, under pretence of christian liberty? South.

2. Grossness of mind.

He did not institute this way of worship, but because of the carnality of their hearts, and the proneness of that people to idolatry. Tillotson.

CARNALLY. adv. [from carnal.] According to the flesh; not spiritually.

Where they found men in diet, attire, furniture of house or any other way obervers of civility and decent order, such they reproved, as being carnally and earthly minded. Hosker.

In the sacrament we do not receive Christ carnally, but we receive him spiritually; and that of itself is a conjugation of blessings and spiritual graces. Taylor's Worshy Communicant.

CARNALNESS. n. f. The same with carnality. Dick.

CARNATION. n. f. [from carnes, Lat.] The name of the natural flesh colour; from whence perhaps the flower is named; the name of a flower.

And to the wretch! whose vile, whose insect lust
Laid this gay daughter of the spring in dust;
O punish him! or to the Elysian shades
Dismiss my soul, where no carnation fades. Pope.

CARNELION. n. f. A precious stone.

The common carnelion has its name from its flesh colour: which is, in some of these stones, paler, when it is called the female carnelion; in others deeper, called the male. Woodward.

CARNEOUS. adj. [from carneus, Lat.] Flethly.

In a calf, the umbilical vessels terminate in certain bodies, divided into a multitude of carneous papillae. Ray.

TO CARNIFY. v. n. [from caro, carnis, Lat.] To breed flesh; to turn nutriment into flesh.

At the same time I think, I deliberate, I purpose, I command: in inferior faculties, I walk, I see, I hear, I digest, I satguify, I carnify. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

CARNIVAL. n. f. [from carnival, Fr.] The feast held in the popish countries before lent; a time of luxury.

The whole year is but one mad carnival, and we are voluptuous not so much upon desire or appetite, as by way of exploit and bravery. Decay of Piety.

CAR

CARNIVOROUS. adj. [from carnis and voro.] Flesh-eating; that of which flesh is the proper food.

In birds there is no mastication or comminution of the meat in the mouth; but in such as are not carnivorous, it is immediately swallowed into the crop or craw. Ray on the Creation.

Man is by his frame, as well as his appetite, a carnivorous animal. Arbutnot on Aliments.

CARNOSITY. n. f. [carnosité, Fr.] Fleishy excrecence.

By this method, and by this course of diet, with fudorificks, the ulcers are healed, and that carnosity resolved. Wifeman.

CARNOUS. adj. [from caro, carnis, Lat.] Fleishy.

The first or outward part is a thick and carnous covering, like that of a walnut; the second, a dry and flosculous coat, commonly called mace. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The muscle whereby he is enabled to draw himself together, the academists describe to be a distinct carnous muscle, extended to the ear. Ray on the Creation.

CAROB, or St. John's Bread. [foliaca, Lat.]

A tree very common in Spain, and in some parts of Italy, where it produces a great quantity of long, flat, brown-coloured pods, which are thick, mealy, and of a sweetish taste. These pods are eaten by the poorer inhabitants. Miller.

CAROCHE. n. f. [from carosse, Fr.] A coach: a carriage of pleasure. It is used in the comedy of Albamar, but now it is obsolete.

CAROL. n. f. [carola, Ital. from choreola, Lat.]

1. A song of joy and exultation.

And let the Graces dance unto the rest,
For they can do it best:
The whiles the maidens do their carol sing,
To which the woods shall answer, and their echo ring. Spenser's Epithalamium.

Even in the old testament, if you listen to David's harp, you shall hear as many hearle-like airs as carols. Bacon.

Oppos'd to her on t'other side advance
The costly feast, the carol, and the dance,
Minstrels and musick, poetry and play,
And balls by night, and tournaments by day. Dryden.

2. A song of devotion.
No night is now with hymn or carol blest. Shakespeare.

They gladly thither haste; and, by a choir
Of squadron'd angels, hear his carol sung. Milton.

3. A song in general.
The carol they began that hour,
How that a life was but a flower. Shakespeare.

To CAROL. v. n. [carolare, Ital.] To sing; to warble; to sing in joy and festivity.

Hark, how the cheerful birds do chant their lays,
And carol of love's praise. Spenser.

This done, the fang, and caroll'd out to clear,
That men and angels might rejoice to hear. Dryden.

Hov'ring swans their throats releas'd
From native silence, carol sounds harmonious. Prior.

To CAROL. v. a. To praise; to celebrate in song.

She with precious viol'd liquors heals,
For which the shepherds at their festivals,
Carol their goodness loud in rustick lays. Milton.

CAROTID. adj. [carotides, Lat.] Two arteries which arise out of the ascending trunk of the aorta, near where the subclavian arteries arise.

The carotid, vertebral, and splenick arteries, are not only variously contorted, but also here and there dilated, to moderate the motion of the blood. Ray on the Creation.

CAROUSAL. n. f. [from carouse.] It seems more properly pronounced with the accent upon the second syllable; but Dryden accents it on the first.

A festival.

This game, these carousals Ascanius taught,
And building Alba to the Latins brought. Dryden.

To CAROUSE. v. n. [carousser, Fr. from gar au, all out, Germ.] To drink; to quaff; to drink largely.

He calls for wine: a health, quoth he, as if H'ad been aboard carousing to his mates
After a storm. Shakespeare.

Learn with how little life may be preserv'd,
In gold and myrrh they need not to carouse. Raleigh.

Now hats fly off, and youths carouse,
Healts first go round, and then the house,
The brides came thick and thick. Suckling.

Under the shadow of friendly boughs
They sit carousing, where their liquor grows. Waller.

To CAROUSE. v. a. To drink up lavishly.
Now my sick fool, Roderigo,
Whom love hath turn'd almost the wrong side out,
To Desdemona hath to-night carous'd
Potations pottle deep. Shakespeare.

Our cheerful guests carouse the sparkling tears
Of the rich grape, whilst musick charms their ears. Denham.

CAROUSE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A drinking match.
Waste in wild riot what your land allows,
There ply the early feast, and late carouse. Pope.

2. A hearty dose of liquor.
He had to many eyes watching over him, as he could not drink a full carouse of sack; but the state was advertised thereof within a few hours after. Davies on Ireland.

Please you, we may contrive this afternoon,
And quaff carouses to your mistress's health. Shakespeare.

CAROUSE. n. f. [from carouse.] A drinker, a toper.
The bold carouser, and advent'ring dame,
Nor fear the fever, nor refuse the flame;
Safe in his skill from all constraint set free,
But conscious shame, remorse, and piety. Granville.

CARP. n. f. [carpe, Fr.] A pond fish.
A friend of mine stor'd a pond of three or four acres with carps and tench. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

To CARP. v. n. [carpo, Lat.] To censure; to cavil; to find fault: with at before the thing or person censured.
Tertullian, even often through discontentment, carp'd injuriously at them, as though they did it even when they were free from such meaning. Hooker.

This your all-licens'd fool
Does hourly carp and quarrel, breaking forth
In rank and not to be endured riots. Shakef.

No, not a tooth or nail to scratch
And at my actions carp or catch. Herben.

When I spoke,
My honest homely words were carp'd and censur'd,
For want of courtly stile. Dryden.

CARPENTER. n. f. [charpentier, Fr.] An artificer in wood; a builder of houses and ships. He is distinguished from a joiner, as the carpenter performs larger and stronger work.
This work performed with advisement good,
Godfrey his carpenters, and men of skill,
In all the camp, sent to an aged wood. Fairfax.

In building Hiero's great ship, there were three hundred carpenters employed for a year together. Wilkins.

In burden'd vessels, first with speedy care,
His plenteous stores do season'd timbers send,
Thither the brawny carpenters repair,
And, as the surgeons of maim'd ships, attend. Dryden.

CARPENTRY. n. f. [from carpenter.] The trade or art of a carpenter.
It had been more proper for me to have introduced carpentry before joinery, because necessity did doubtless compel our forefathers to use the convenience of the first, rather than the extravagance of the last. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

CARPER. n. f. [from To carp.] A caviller; a censorious man.
I have not these weeds,
By putting on the cunning of a carper. Shakef.

CARPET. n. f. [karp, Dutch.]

1. A covering of various colours, spread upon floors or tables.

Be the Jacks fair within, the Jills fair without, carpets laid, and every thing in order? Shakespeare.

Against the wall, in the middle of the half pace, is a chair placed before him, with a table and carpet before it. Bacon.

2. Ground variegated with flowers, and level and smooth.
Go signify as much, while here we march
Upon the grassy carpet of this plain. Shakespeare.

The carpet ground shall be with leaves o'erspread,
And boughs shall weave a cov'ring for your head. Dryden.

3. Any thing variegated.
The whole dry land is, for the most part, covered over with a lovely carpet of green grass, and other herbs. Ray.

4. Carpet is used, proverbially, for a state of ease and luxury; as, a carpet knight, a knight that has never known the field, and has recommended himself only at table.
He is knight, dubbed with unhack'd rapier, and on carpet confideration. Shakespeare.

5. To be on the carpet, [sur le tapis, Fr.] is to be the subject of consideration; an affair in hand.
To CARPET. v. a. [from the noun.] To spread with carpets.
We found him in a fair chamber, richly hang'd and carpeted under foot, without any degrees to the state; he was set upon a low throne, richly adorned, and a rich cloth of state over his head, of blue satin embroidered. Bacon.

The dry land we find every where naturally carpeted over with grass, and other agreeable wholesome plants. Derham.

CARPING. particip. adj. [from To carp.] Captious: censorious.
No carping critick interrupts his praise,
No rival strives but for a second place. Granville.

Lay aside therefore a carping spirit, and read even an adversary with an honest design to find out his true meaning; do not snatch at little lapses, and appearances of mistake. Watts.

CARPINGLY. adv. [from carping.] Captiously;
censoriously.
We derive out of the Latin at second hand by the French, and make good English, as in these adverbs, carpingly, currently, actively, colourably.
Camden's Remains.

CARPMEALS. n. f. A kind of coarse cloth made in the north of England. Phillips's World of Words.

CARPUS. n. f. [Latin.] The wrist, so named by anatomists, which is made up of eight little bones, of different figures and thickness, placed in two ranks, four in each rank. They are

His eye, that ev'n did mark her trodden grass,
That she would fain the catch of Strephon fly.

2. Watch; the posture of feizing.

Both of them lay upon the catch for a great action; it is no wonder, therefore, that they were often engaged on one subject.

3. An advantage taken; hold laid on, as in haste.

All which notions are but ignorant catches of a few things, which are most obvious to men's observations.

The motion is but a catch of the wit upon a few instances; as the manner is in the philosophy received.

Fate of empires, and the fall of kings,
Should turn on flying hours, and catch of moments.

4. The act of taking quickly from another.

Several quires, placed one over against another, and taking the voice by catches anthem wife, give great pleasure.

5. A song sung in succession, where one catches it from another.

This is the tune of our catch, play'd by the picture of nobody.

Far be from thence the glutton parasite,
Singing his drunken catches all the night.

The meat was serv'd, the bowls were crown'd,
Catches were sung, and healths went round.

6. The thing caught; profit; advantage.

Hector shall have a great catch, if he knock out your brains; he were as good crack a fust nut with no kernel.

7. A snatch; short interval of action.

It has been writ by catches, with many intervals.

8. A taint; a slight contagion.

We retain a catch of those pretty stories, and our awakened imagination smiles in the recollection.

9. Any thing that catches and holds, as a hook.

10. A small swift-failing ship: often written catch.

CATCHER. n. f. [from catch.]

1. He that catches.

2. That in which any thing is caught.

Scallops will move so strongly, as oftentimes to leap out of the catcher wherein they are caught.

CATCHELY. n. f. [from catch and fly.] A plant; a species of campion; which see.

CATCH-ALL. n. f. [from catch and poll.] A serjeant; a bumbailiff.

Catchpoll, though now it be used as a word of contempt, yet, in ancient times, it seems to have been used without reproach, or such as we now call serjeants of the mace, or any other that uses to arrest men upon any cause.

They call all temporal businesses under-sheriffries, as if they were but matters for under-sheriffs and catchpolls; though many times those under-sheriffries do more good than their high speculations.

Another monster,
Sullen of aspect, by the vulgar call'd
A catchpoll, whose polluted hands the gods,
With force incredible and magick charms,
Ere have endur'd, if he his ample palm
Should haply on ill-fated shoulder lay
Of debtor.

CATCHWORD. n. f. [from catch and word. With printers.] The word at the corner of the page under the last line, which is repeated at the top of the next page.

CATE. n. f. Food; something to be eaten.

This is scarcely read in the singular. See CATES.

We'll see what cates you have,
For soldiers stomachs always serve them well.

CATECHETICAL. adj. [from catechēō.] Consisting of questions and answers.

Socrates introduced a catechetical method of arguing; he would ask his adversary question upon question, till he convinced him, out of his own mouth, that his opinions were wrong.

CATECHETICALLY. adv. [from catechetical.] In the way of question and answer.

tion; it is no wonder, therefore, that they were often engaged on one subject.

3. An advantage taken; hold laid on, as in haste.

All which notions are but ignorant catches of a few things, which are most obvious to men's observations.

The motion is but a catch of the wit upon a few instances; as the manner is in the philosophy received.

Fate of empires, and the fall of kings,
Should turn on flying hours, and catch of moments.

4. The act of taking quickly from another.

Several quires, placed one over against another, and taking the voice by catches anthem wife, give great pleasure.

5. A song sung in succession, where one catches it from another.

This is the tune of our catch, play'd by the picture of nobody.

Far be from thence the glutton parasite,
Singing his drunken catches all the night.

The meat was serv'd, the bowls were crown'd,
Catches were sung, and healths went round.

6. The thing caught; profit; advantage.

Hector shall have a great catch, if he knock out your brains; he were as good crack a fust nut with no kernel.

7. A snatch; short interval of action.

It has been writ by catches, with many intervals.

To CATECHISE. v. a. [κατεχίζω.]

1. To instruct by asking questions, and correcting the answers.

I will catechise the world for him; that is, make questions, and bid them answer.

Had those three thousand souls been catechised by our modern casuists, we had seen a wide difference.

2. To question; to interrogate; to examine; to try by interrogatories.

Why then I suck my teeth, and catechise
My piked man of countries.

There flies about a strange report,
Of some express arriv'd at court;
I'm stopp'd by all the fools I meet,
And catechis'd in ev'ry street.

CA'TECHISER. n. f. [from To catechise.] One who catechises.

CA'TECHISM. n. f. [from κατεχίζω.] A form of instruction by means of questions and answers, concerning religion.

Ways of teaching there have been sundry always usual in God's church; for the first introduction of youth to the knowledge of God, the Jews even till this day have their catechisms.

He had no catechism but the creation, needed no study but reflection, and read no book but the volume of the world.

CA'TECHIST. n. f. [κατεχιστής.] One whose charge is to instruct by questions, or to question the uninstructed concerning religion.

None of years and knowledge was admitted, who had not been instructed by the catechist in this foundation, which the catechist received from the bishop.

CA'TECHUMEN. n. f. [κατεχουμένης.] One who is yet in the first rudiments of christianity; the lowest order of christians in the primitive church.

The prayers of the church did not begin in St. Austin's time, till the catechumens were dismissed.

CA'TECHUMENICAL. adj. [from catechumen.] Belonging to the catechumens.

CATEGORICAL. adj. [from category.] Absolute; adequate; positive; equal to the thing to be expressed.

The king's commissioners desired to know, whether the parliament's commissioners did believe that bishops were unlawful? They could never obtain a categorical answer.

A single proposition, which is also categorical, may be divided again into simple and complex.

CATEGORICALLY. adv. [from categorical.]

1. Directly; expressly.

2. Positively; plainly.

I dare affirm, and that categorically, in all parts where-ever trade is great, and continues so, that trade must be nationally profitable.

CA'TEGORY. n. f. [κατηγορία.] A class; a rank; an order of ideas; a predicament.

The absolute infinitude, in a manner, quite changes the nature of beings, and exalts them into a different category.

CATENARIAN. adj. [from catena, Lat.] Relating to a chain; resembling a chain.

In geometry, the catenarian curve is formed by a rope or chain hanging freely between two points of suspension.

The back is bent after the manner of the catenarian curve, by which it obtains that curvature that is safest for the included marrow.

CA'TENATE. v. a. [from catena, Lat.] To chain.

CATENATION. n. f. [from catena, Lat.] Link; regular connexion.

This catenation, or conserving union, whenever his pleasure shall divide, let go, or separate, they shall fall from their existence.

CA'TER. v. n. [from cater.] To provide food; to buy in victuals.

He

CAT

He that doth the ravens feed,
Yea providently caters for the sparrow,
Be comfort to my age. Shakspeare. As you like it.
CATER. n. f. [from the verb.] Provider; collector of provisions, or victuals: misprinted
perhaps for Caterer.

The oysters dredged in this Lyner, find a welcome acceptance, where the taste is cater for the stomach, than those of the Tamar.

Cater's Survey of Cornwall.
CATER. n. f. [quatre, Fr.] The four of cards and dice.

CATER-COUSIN. n. f. A corruption of quatre-cousin, from the ridiculousness of calling cousin or relation to so remote a degree.

His master and he, saving your worship's reverence, are scarce cater-cousins.

Shakspeare's Merchant of Venice.
Poetry and reason, how come these to be cater-cousins?

CATERER. n. f. [from cater.] One employed to select and buy in provisions for the family; the providore or purveyor.

Let no scent offensive the chamber infest;
Let fancy, not cost, prepare all our dishes;

Let the caterer mind the taste of each guest,
And the cook in his dressing comply with their wishes. Ben Jonson's Tavern Academy.

He made the greedy ravens to be Elias's caterers, and bring him food. King Charles.

Seldom shall one see in cities or courts that athletic vigour, which is seen in poor houses, where nature is their cook, and necessity their caterer.

South.
CATERESS. n. f. [from cater.] A woman employed to cater, or provide victuals.

Impostor! do not charge innocent nature,
As if she would her children should be riotous
With her abundance? she, good cateress, Means her provision only to the good. Milton.

CATERPILLAR. n. f. [This word Skinner and Minsheu are inclined to derive from chatte peluse, a weasel; it seems easily deducible from cates, food, and pillar, Fr. to rob; the animal that eats up the fruits of the earth.]

1. A worm which, when it gets wings, is sustained by leaves and fruits.

The caterpillar breedeth of dew and leaves; for we see infinite caterpillars breed upon trees and hedges, by which the leaves of the trees or hedges are consumed. Bacon.

Auster is drawn with a pot pouring forth water, with which descend grasshoppers, caterpillars, and creatures bred by moisture. Pleasant on Draining.

2. Any thing voracious and useless.

CATERPILLAR. n. f. [scorpioides, Lat.] The name of a plant. Miller.

TO CATERWAUL. v. n. [from cat.]

1. To make a noise as cats in rutting time.

2. To make any offensive or odious noise.

What a caterwauling do you keep here? If my lady has not called up her steward Malvolio, and bid him turn you out of doors, never trust me.

Shakspeare's Twelfth Night.

Was no dispute between

The caterwauling brethren? Hudibras.

CATES. n. f. [of uncertain etymology; Skinner imagines it may be corrupted from delicate; which is not likely, because Junius observes, that the Dutch have kater in the same sense with our cater.
It has no singular.] Viands; food; dith of meat;
generally employed to signify nice and luxurious food.

The fair acceptance, Sir, creates

The entertainment perfect, not the cates.

Ben Jonson.

O wasteful riot, never well content

With low-priz'd fare; hunger ambitious

Of cates by land and sea far fetcht and sent.

Rudigh.

Alas, how simple to these cates,

Was that crude apple that diverted Eve!

Paradise Lost.

They by th' alluring odour drawn, in haste

Fly to the dulcet cates, and crouding sip

Their palatable baue. Philips.

CAT

With costly cates she stain'd her frugal board,
Then with ill-gotten wealth she bought a lord.

Arbutnot.

CATFISH. n. f. The name of a sea-fish in the West-Indies; so called from its round head and large glaring eyes, by which they are discovered in hollow rocks. Philips.

CATHARPINGS. n. f. Ropes in a ship, running in little blocks from one side of the shrouds to the other, near the top; they belong only to the lower shrouds; and their use is to force the shrouds tight, for the ease and safety of the masts, when the ship rolls. Harris.

CATHARTICAL. } adj. [καθαρτικός.] Purging CATHARTICK. } medicines. The vermicu-lar or peristaltick motion of the guts continually helps on their contents, from the pylorus to the rectum; and every irritation either quickens that motion in its natural order, or occasions some little inversions in it. In both, what but slightly adheres to the coats, will be loosened, and they will be more agitated, and thus rendered more fluid.
By this only it is manifest, how a cathartic hastens and increases the discharges by stool; but where the force of the stimulus is great, all the appen-dages of the bowels, and all the viscera in the abdomen, will be twitched; by which a great deal will be drained back into the intestines, and made a part of what they discharge. Quincy.

Quicksilver precipitated either with gold, or without addition, into a powder, is wont to be strongly enough cathartical, though the chymists have not proved, that either gold or mercury hath any salt, much less any that is purgative.

Boyle's Sceptical Chymistry.

Lustrations and catharticks of the mind were fought for, and all endeavours used to calm and regulate the fury of the passions. Decay of Piety.

The piercing causticks ply their spiteful pow'r,
Emetics ranch, and keen catharticks scour. Garth.

Plato has called mathematical demonstrations
the catharticks or purgatives of the soul.

Addison's Spectator.

CATHARTICALNESS. n. f. [from cathartical.]
Purging quality.

CATHEAD. n. f. A kind of fossil.

The nodules with leaves in them, called catheads, seem to consist of a sort of iron stone, not unlike that which is found in the rocks near Whitehaven in Cumberland, where they call them catcaups.

Woodward on Fossils.

CATHEAD. n. f. [In a ship.] A piece of timber with two sheaves at one end, having a rope and a block, to which is fastened a great iron hook, to trice up the anchor from the hawse to the top of the forecastle. Sea Dict.

CATHE'DRAL. adj. [from catbedra, Lat. a chair of authority; an episcopal see.]

1. Episcopal; containing the see of a bishop.

A cathedral church is that wherein there are two or more persons, with a bishop at the head of them, that do make as it were one body politic.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

Methought I sat in seat of majesty,
In the cathedral church of Westminster.

Shakspeare's Henry VI.

2. Belonging to an episcopal church.

His constant and regular assisting at the cathedral service was never interrupted by the sharpness of weather. Locke.

3. In low phrase, antique; venerable; old.

This seems to be the meaning in the following lines:

Here aged trees cathedral walks compose,
And mount the hill in venerable rows;

There the green infants in their beds are laid. Pope.

CATHE'DRAL. n. f. The head church of a diocese.

There is nothing in Leghorn so extraordinary as the cathedral, which a man may view with pleasure, after he has seen St. Peter's. Addison on Italy.

CATHERINE PEAR. See PEAR.

For streaks of red were mingled there,
Such as are on a Catherine pear,

The side that's next the fun. Suckling.

CAT

CATHER. n. f. [καθήτης.] A hollow and somewhat crooked instrument, to thrust into the bladder, to assist in bringing away the urine, when the passage is stopped by a stone or gravel.

A large clyster, suddenly injected, hath frequently forced the urine out of the bladder; but if it fail, a catheter must help you.

Wise man's Surgery.

CATHOLES. n. f. [In a ship.] Two little holes altern above the gun-room ports, to bring in a cable or hawser through them to the captain, when there is occasion to heave the ship astern.

CATHOLICISM. n. f. [from catholic.] Adherence to the catholic church.

CATHOLICK. adj. [catholique, Fr. καθολικός, universal or general.]

1. The church of Jesus Christ is called catholic, because it extends throughout the world, and is not limited by time.

2. Some truths are said to be catholic, because they are received by all the faithful.

3. Catholic is often set in opposition to heretick or sectary, and to schismatick.

4. Catholic, or canonical epistles, are seven in number; that of St. James, two of St. Peter, three of St. John, and that of St. Jude. They are called catholic, because they are directed to all the faithful, and not to any particular church; and canonical, because they contain excellent rules of faith and morality. Gabnet.

Doubtless the success of those your great and catholic endeavours will promote the empire of man over nature, and bring plentiful accession of glory to your nation. Glanville's Sceptis.

Those systems undertake to give an account of the formation of the universe, by mechanical hypotheses of matter, moved either uncertainly, or according to some catholic laws. Ray.

CATHOLICON. n. f. [from catholic; καθολικόν
ἔλεος.] An universal medicine.

Preservation against that sin, is the contemplation of the last judgment. This is indeed a catholicon against all; but we find it particularly applied by St. Paul to judging and despising our brethren. Government of the Tongue.

CATKINS. n. f. [kāt ekens, Dutch. In botany.]
An assemblage of imperfect flowers hanging from trees, in manner of a rope or cat's tail; serving as male blossoms, or flowers of the trees, by which they are produced. Chambers.

CATLIKE. adj. [from cat and like.] Like a cat.

glass.] That part of opticks which treats of vision
by reflection.

CATPIPE. n. f. [from cat and pipe.] The same with cateal; an instrument that makes a squeaking noise.

Some songsters can no more sing in any chamber but their own, than some clerks can read in any book but their own; put them out of their road once, and they are mere catpipes and dunces.

L'Estrange.

CAT'S-EYE. A stone.

There is nothing to be left void in a firm building; even the cavities ought not to be filled with rubbish, which is of a perishing kind.

Dryden's Dedication to Æneid.
Materials packed together with wonderful art in the several cavities of the skull.

Addison's Spectator.
An instrument with a small cavity, like a small spoon, dipt in oil, may fetch out the stone.

Arbutnot on Diet.
If the atmosphere was reduced into water, it would not make an orb above thirty-two feet deep, which would soon be swallowed up by the cavity of the sea, and the depressed parts of the earth.

Bentley.
CAUK. n. f. A coarse talky spar. Woodward.
CAUKY. adj. [from cauk.] A white, opaque, cauky spar, shot or pointed. Woodward on Fossils.

CAUL. n. f. [of uncertain etymology.]
1. The net in which women inclose their hair; the hinder part of a woman's cap.

Ne spared they to strip her naked all,
Then when they had despoil'd her tire and caul,
Such as she was, their eyes might her behold.

Spenser.
Her head with ringlets of her hair is crown'd,
And in a golden caul the curls are bound.

Dryden's Æneid.
2. Any kind of small net.

An Indian mantle of feathers, and the feathers wrought into a caul of packthread. Grew's Museum.

3. The omentum; the integument in which the guts are inclosed.

The caul serves for the warming the lower belly, like an apron or piece of woollen cloth. Hence a certain gladiator, whose caul Galen cut out, was so liable to suffer cold, that he kept his belly constantly covered with wool. Ray.

The beast they then divide, and disunite
The ribs and limbs, observant of the rite:
On these, in double cauls involv'd with art,
The choicest morsels lay. Pope's Odyssey.

CAULIFEROUS. adj. [from caulis, a stalk, and fero, to bear, Lat.] A term in botany for such plants as have a true stalk, which a great many have not.

CAULIFLOWER. n. f. [from caulis, Lat. the stalk of a plant.] A species of cabbage.

Towards the end of the month, earth up your winter plants and salad herbs; and plant forth your cauliflowers and cabbage, which were sown in August. Evelyn's Kalendar.

To CAULK. See To CALK.

CAUSABLE. adj. [from causa, low Lat.] That which may be caused, or effected by a cause.

That may be miraculously effected in one, which is naturally causable in another.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.
CAUSAL. adj. [from causalis, low Lat.] Relating to causes; implying or containing causes.

Every motion owning a dependence on pre-requ岸ed motors, we can have no true knowledge of any, except we would distinctly pry into the whole method of causal concatenation.

Glanville's Sceptis Scientifica.
Causal propositions are, where two propositions are joined by causal particles; as, houses were not built, that they might be destroyed; Rehoboam was unhappy, because he followed evil counsel.

Watt's Logic.
CAUSALITY. n. f. [from causalitas, low Latin] The agency of a cause; the quality of causing.

As he created all things, so is he beyond and in them all, in his very essence, as being the fount of their causalities, and the essential cause of their existences.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.
By an unadvised transiency from the effect to the remotest cause, we observe not the connection, through the interposal of more immediate causalities.

Glanville's Sceptis.
CAUSALLY. adv. [from causal.] According to the order or series of causes.

Thus may it more be causally made out, what Hippocrates affirmeth. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CAUSA'TION. n. f. [from causa, low Lat.] The act or power of causing.

Thus doth he sometimes delude us in the conceits of stars and meteors, besides their allowable actions, ascribing effects thereto of independent causation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CAUSATIVE. adj. [a term in grammar.] That expresses a cause or reason.

CAUSA'TOR. n. f. [from causa, low Lat.] A causer; an author of any effect.

Demonstratively understanding the simplicity of perfection, and the invisible condition of the first causator, it was out of the power of earth, or the areopagy of hell, to work them from it.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.
CAUSE. n. f. [from causa, Lat.]

1. That which produces or effects any thing; the efficient.

The wife and learned amongst the very heathens themselves, have all acknowledged some first cause, whereupon originally the being of all things dependeth; neither have they otherwise spoken of that cause, than as an agent, which, knowing what and why it worketh, observeth, in working, a most exact order or law. Hooker.

Butterflies, and other flies, revive easily when they seem dead, being brought to the sun or fire; the cause whereof is the diffusion of the vital spirit, and the dilating of it by a little heat.

Bacon's Natural History.
Cause is a substance exerting its power into act, to make one thing begin to be. Locke.

2. The reason; motive to any thing.

The rest shall bear some other fight,
As cause will be obey'd. Shakespeare.

So great, so constant, and so general a practice, must needs have not only a cause, but also a great, a constant, and a general cause, every way commensurate to such an effect. South.

Thus, royal sir! to see you landed here,
Was cause enough of triumph for a year. Dryden.

Æneas wond'ring stood: then ask'd the cause,
Which to the stream the crouding people draws. Dryden.

Even he,
Lamenting that there had been cause of enmity,
Will often wish fate had ordain'd you friends. Roscoe.

3. Reason of debate; subject of litigation.

O madness of discourse!
That cause sets up with and against thyself! Shakespeare.

Bifold authority.
Hear the causes between your brethren, and judge righteously between every man and his brother, and the stranger that is with him. Dut.

4. Side; party; ground or principle of action or opposition.

Ere to thy cause, and thee, my heart inclin'd,
Or love to party had seduc'd my mind. Tickell.

To CAUSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To effect as an agent; to produce.

Never was man whose apprehensions are sober, and by a pensive inspection advised, but hath found by an irresistible necessity one everlasting being, all for ever causing, and all for ever sustaining.

Raleigh.
It is necessary in such a chain of causes to ascend to and terminate in some first, which should be the original of motion, and the cause of all other things; but itself be caused by none. South.

She weeping ask'd, in these her blooming years,
What unforeseen misfortune caus'd her care
To loath her life, and languish in despair? Dryden's Fables.

Things that move so swift, as not to affect the senses distinctly, and so cause not any train of ideas in the mind, are not perceived to move. Locke.

CAUSELESSLY. adv. [from causeless.] Without cause; without reason.

Human laws are not to be broken with scandal, nor at all without reason; for he that does it causelessly, is a despiser of the law, and undervalues its authority.

Taylor's Holy Living.
CAUSELESS. adj. [from cause.]

1. Having no cause; original in itself.

Reach th' Almighty's sacred throne,
And make his causeless pow'r, the cause of all things, known. Blackmore's Creation.

2. Wanting just ground or motive.

Yet is my truth upright,
And love avow'd to other lady late,
That, to remove the fame, I have no might:
To change love causeless, is reproach to warlike knight. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

And me and mine, threats not with war but death;

Thus causeless hatred endless is uneth. Fairfax.

The causeless dislike, which others have conceived, is no sufficient reason for us to forbear in any place. Hooker.

As women yet who apprehend
Some sudden cause of causeless fear,
Although that seeming cause take end,
A shaking through their limbs they find. Waller.

Alas! my fears are causeless and ungrounded, Fantastick dreams, and melancholy fumes. Denham.

CAUSER. n. f. [from causo.] He that causes; the agent by which an effect is produced.

His whole oration flood upon a short narration, what was the causer of this metamorphosis. Sidney.

Is not the causer of these timelefs deaths,
As blameful as the executioner? Shakespeare.

Abstinence the apostle determines is of no other real value in religion, than as a ministerial causer of moral effects. Rogers.

CAUSEY. } n. f. [from causé, Fr. This word, CAUSEWAY. } by a false notion of its etymology, has been lately written causway. A way raised and paved; a way raised above the rest of the ground.

To Shuppim the lot came forth westward by the causway. Chron. xxvi. 16.

Th' other way Satan went down,
The causway to hell-gate. Milton.

But that broad causway will direct your way,
And you may reach the town by noon of day. Dryden.

Whose causway parts the vale with shady rows;
Whose seats the weary traveller repose. Pope.

CAUSTICAL. } adj. [from caustikos.] Epithets of medicinal

CAUSTICK. } dicaments which destroy the texture of the part to which they are applied, and eat it away, or burn it into an eschar, which they do by extreme minuteness, asperity, and quantity of motion, that, like those of fire itself, destroy the texture of the solids, and change what they are applied to into a substance like burnt flesh; which, in a little time, with detergent dressing, falls quite off, and leaves a vacancy in the part. Quincy.

If extirpation be safe, the best way will be by caustical medicines or escharotics. Wise's Surgery.

I propos'd eradicating by escharotics, and began with a caustick stone. Wise's Surgery.

Air too hot, cold and moist, abounding perhaps with caustick, astringent, and coagulating particles. Arbutnot.

CAUSTICK. n. f. A burning application.

It was a tenderness to mankind, that introduced corrosives and causticks, which are indeed but artificial fires. Temple.

The piercing causticks ply their spiteful pow'r,
Emetics ranch, and keen catharticks scour. Garth.

CAUTEL. n. f. [from cautela, Lat.] Caution; scruple: a word disused.

Perhaps he loves you now;
And now no foil of cautel doth besmerch
The virtue of his will. Shakespeare.

CAUTELOUS. adj. [from cautelus, Fr.]

1. Cautious; wary; provident. Not in use.

Palladio doth wish, like a cautelous artisan, that the inward walls might bear some good share in the burden. Wotton.

2. Wily; cunning; treacherous.

Of themselves, for the most part, they are so cautelous and wily headed, especially being men of so small experience and practice in law matters, that you would wonder whence they borrow such subtilties and fly shifts. Spenser on Ireland.

Your son
Will or exceed the common, or be caught
With cautelous baits and practice. Shakespeare.

CAUTELOUSLY.

CAUTELOUSLY. adv. [from cautelous.]

1. Cunningly; sily; treacherously. Not in use.
All pretorian courts, if any of the parties be laid asleep, under pretence of a retirement, and the other party doth cautelously get the start and advantage, yet they will set back all things in status quo prius. Bacon's War with Spain.

2. Cautiously; warily.

The Jews, not resolved of the sciatica side of Jacob, do cautelously, in their diet, abstain from both. Brown.

CAUTERIZATION. n. f. [from cauteriz.] The act of burning flesh with hot irons, or caustic medicaments.

They require, after cauterization, no such bandage, as that thereby you need to fear interception of the spirits. Wise man.

To CAUTERIZE. v. a. [cauterizer, Fr.] To burn with the cautery.

For each true word a blister, and each false, Be cauterizing to the root o' th' tongue, Confuming it with speaking. Shakespeare.

No marvel though cantharides have such a corrosive and cauterizing quality; for there is not one other of the insects, but is bred of a duller matter. Bacon's Natural History.

The design of the cautery is to prevent the canal from closing; but the operators confess, that, in persons cauterized, the tears trickled down ever after. Shaw's Surgery.

CAUTERY. n. f. [cauterio, uro.]

Cautery is either actual or potential; the first is burning by a hot iron, and the latter with caustic medicines. The actual cautery is generally used to stop mortification, by burning the dead parts to the quick; or to stop the effusion of blood, by searing up the vessels. Quincy.

In heat of fight it will be necessary to have your actual cautery always ready; for that will secure the bleeding arteries in a moment. Wise man's Surgery.

CAUTION. n. f. [cautio, Fr. cautio, Lat.]

1. Prudence, as it respects danger; foresight; provident care; wariness against evil.

2. Security for.

Such conditions, and cautions of the condition, as might assure with as much assurance as worldly matters bear. Sidney.

The Cedar, upon this new acquiescence, gave him part of Baccharia for caution for his disbursements. Hovel.

The parliament would yet give his majesty sufficient caution that the war should be prosecuted. Clarendon.

He that objects any crime, ought to give caution by the means of sureties, that he will persevere in the prosecution of such crimes. Ayliffe's Parergon.

3. Provision or security against.

In despite of all the rules and cautions of government, the most dangerous and mortal of vices will come off. L'Estrange.

4. Provisionary precept.

Attention to the forementioned symptoms affords the best cautions and rules of diet, by way of prevention. Arbutnot.

5. Warning.

To CAUTION. v. a. [from the noun.] To warn; to give notice of a danger.

How shall our thought avoid the various snare? Or wisdom to our caution'd soul declare
The different shapes thou pleasest to employ,
When bent to hurt, and certain to destroy? Prior.

You caution'd me against their charms,
But never gave me equal arms. Swift.

CAUTIONARY. adj. [from cautio.] Given as a pledge, or in security.

I am made the cautionary pledge,
The gage and hostage of your keeping it. Southern.

Is there no security for the island of Britain?
Has the enemy no cautionary towns and sea-ports,
To give us for securing trade? Swift.

CAUTIOUS. adj. [from cautus, Lat.] Wary; watchful.

Be cautious of him; for he is sometimes an inconstant lover, because he hath a great advantage. Swift.

CAUTIOUSLY. adv. [from cautious.] In an attentive, wary manner; warily.

They know how fickle common lovers are: Their oaths and vows are cautiously believ'd; For few there are but have been once deceiv'd. Dryden.

CAUTIOUSNESS. n. f. [from cautious.] Watchfulness; vigilance; circumspection; provident care; prudence with respect to danger.

I could not but approve their generous constancy and cautiousness. King Charles.

We should always act with great cautiousness and circumspection, in points where it is not impossible that we may be deceived. Addison.

To CAW. v. n. [taken from the sound.] To cry as the rook, raven, or crow.

Ruflet-pated choughs, many in fort,
Rising and cawing at the gun's report. Shakespeare.

A walk of aged elms, so very high, that the rooks and crows upon the tops seem to be cawing in another region. Addison.

The rook, who high amid the boughs,
In early spring, his airy city builds,
And ceaseless caws. Thomson's Spring.

To CEASE. v. n. [cess, Fr. cess, Lat.]

1. To leave off; to stop; to give over; to desist; with from before a noun.

The lives of all, who cease from combat, spare; My brother's be your most peculiar care. Dryden.

2. To fail; to be extinct; to pass away.

The poor man shall never cease out of the land. Deuteronomy.

The soul being removed, the faculties and operations of life, sense and intellect cease from that mole corporis, and are no longer in it. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

3. To be at an end.

But now the wonder ceases, since I see
She kept them only, Tityrus, for thee. Dryden.

4. To rest.

The ministers of Christ have ceased from their labours. Spratt.

To CEASE. v. a. To put a stop to; to put an end to.

Importune him for monies; be not ceas'd
With slight denial. Shakespeare.

You may sooner, by imagination, quicken or slack a motion, than raise or cease it; as it is easier to make a dog go slower, than to make him stand still. Bacon's Natural History.

Cease then this impious rage. Milton.

But he her fears to cease,
Sent down the meek ey'd peace. Milton.

The discord is complete, nor can they cease
The dire debate, nor yet command the peace. Dryden.

CEASE. n. f. [from the verb.] Extinction; failure: perhaps for decease.

The cease of majesty
Dies not alone, but, like a gulph, withdraws
What's near it, with it. Shakespeare.

CEASELESS. adj. [from cease.] Incessant; perpetual; continual; without pause; without stop; without end.

My guileless blood must quench the ceaseless fire,
On which my endless tears were bootless spent. Fairfax.

All these, with ceaseless praise his works behold,
Both day and night. Milton.

Like an oak
That stands secure, though all the winds employ
Their ceaseless roar, and only sheds its leaves,
Or mast, which the revolving spring restores. Philips.

CECITY. n. f. [cecitas, Lat.] Blindness; privation of sight.

They are not blind, nor yet distinctly see; there is in them no cecety, yet more than a cecuteny; they have sight enough to discern the light, though not perhaps to distinguish objects or colours. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CECUTENCY. n. f. [cecutio, Lat.] Tendency to blindness; cloudiness of sight.

There is in them no cecety, yet more than a cecuteny. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CE/DAR. n. f. [cedrus, Lat.] A tree.

It is evergreen; the leaves are much narrower than those of the pine tree, and many of them produced out of one tubercle, resembling a painter's pencil; it hath male flowers, or katkins, produced at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree. The seeds are produced in large cones; squamose and turbinated. The extension of the branches is very regular in cedar trees; the ends of the shoots declining, and thereby shewing their upper surface, which is constantly clothed with green leaves, so regularly as to appear at a distance like a green carpet, and, in waving about, make an agreeable prospect. It is surprising that this tree has not been more cultivated in England; for it would be a great ornament to barren bleak mountains, even in Scotland, where few other trees would grow; it being a native of Mount Libanus, where the snow continues most part of the year. Maundrel, in his Travels, says, he measured one of the largest cedars on Mount Libanus, and found it to be twelve yards six inches in circumference, and found. At about five or six yards from the ground, it was divided into five limbs, each of which was equal to a great tree. The wood of this famous tree is accounted proof against the putrefaction of animal bodies. The saw-dust is thought to be one of the secrets used by the mountebanks, who pretend to have the embalming mystery. This wood is also said to yield an oil, which is famous for preserving books and writings, and the wood is thought by Bacon to continue above a thousand years found. Miller.

I must yield my body to the earth:
Thus yields the cedar to the axe's edge,
Whose arms gave shelter to the princely eagle;
Under whose shade the ramping lion slept,
Whose top branch overpeer'd Jove's spreading tree,
And kept low shrubs from winter's pow'ful wind. Shakespeare.

CE'DRINE. adj. [cedrinus, Lat.] Of or belonging to the cedar tree.

To CEIL. v. a. [caelo, Lat.] To overlay, or cover the inner roof of a building.

And the greater house he ceiled with fir-tree,
Which he overlaid with fine gold. 2 Chron.

How will he, from his house ceiled with cedar,
be content with his Saviour's lot, not to have where to lay his head? Decay of Piety.

CE'LING. n. f. [from ceil.] The inner roof.

Varnish makes ceilings not only shine, but last. Bacon.

And now the thicken'd sky
Like a dark ceiling stood; down rush'd the rain Impetuous. Milton's Paradise Lost.

So when the sun by day, or moon by night,
Strike on the polish'd brass their trembling light,
The glitt'ring species here and there divide,
And cast their dubious beams from side to side:
Now on the walls, now on the pavement play,
And to the ceiling flash the glaring day. Dryden.

CE'LANDINE. n. f. [chelandium, Lat.] A plant.

The swallows use celandine, the linnet euphrasia. Mort.

CE'LATRE. n. f. [celatura, Lat.] The art of engraving, or cutting in figures.

To CELEBRATE. v. a. [celebro, Lat.]

1. To praise; to commend; to give praise to; to make famous.

The songs of Sion were psalms and pieces of poetry, that adored or celebrated the Supreme Being. Addison.

I would have him read over the celebrated works of antiquity, which have stood the test of so many different ages. Addison.

2. To distinguish by solemn rites; to perform solemnly.

He slew all them that were gone to celebrate the sabbath. 2 Maccab.

On the feast day, the father cometh forth, after divine service, into a large room, where the feast is celebrated. Bacon.

3. To mention in a set or solemn manner, whether of joy or sorrow.

VOL. L. N^o. 8. K k This

CEL

This pause of pow'r, 'tis Ireland's hour to mourn;

While England celebrates your safe return. Dryden.

CELEBRATION. n. f. [from celebrare.]

1. Solemn performance; solemn remembrance.

He laboured to drive sorrow from her, and to hasten the celebration of their marriage. Sidney.

He shall conceal it.

While you are willing it shall come to note;

What time we will our celebration keep;

According to my birth. Shakespeare.

During the celebration of this holy sacrament,

you attend earnestly to what is done by the priest. Taylor.

2. Praise; renown; memorial.

No more shall be added in this place, his memory deserving a particular celebration, than that his learning, piety and virtue, have been attained by few. Clarendon.

Some of the ancients may be thought sometimes to have used a less number of letters, by the celebration of those who have added to their alphabet. Heller's Elements of Speech.

CELEBRIOUS. adj. [from celebrus, Lat.] Famous; renowned; noted. Not in use.

The Jews, Jerusalem, and the Temple, having been always to celebration; yet when, after their captivities, they were despoiled of their glory, even then, the Assyrians, Greeks, and Romans, honoured, with sacrifices, the most high God, whom that nation worshipped. Greene.

CELEBRIOUSLY. adv. [from celebrus.] In a famous manner.

CELEBRIOUSNESS. n. f. [from celebrus.] Renown; fame.

CELEBRITY. n. f. [from celebrus, Lat.] Publick and splendid transaction.

The manner of her receiving, and the celebrity of the marriage, were performed with great magnificence. Bacon.

CELESTIAL. n. f. A species of parsley; it is also called turnip root and celery.

CELESTIALITY. n. f. [from celestialis, Lat.] Swiftness; speed; velocity.

We very well see in them, who thus plead, a wonderful celebrity of discourse; for, perceiving at the first but only some cause of suspicion, and fear lest it should be evil, they are presently, in one and the self-same breath, resolved, that what beginning soever it had, there is no possibility it should be good. Hooker.

His former custom and practice was ever full of forwardness and celebrity, to make heed against them. Bacon.

Thus, with imagin'd wings, our swift scene flies, in motion with no less celebrity

Than that of thought. Shakespeare.

Three things concur to make a percussion great; the bigness, the density, and the celebrity of the body moved. Digby.

Whatever encaseth the density of the blood, even without encasing its celebrity, heats, because a denser body is hotter than a rarer.

CELESTIAL. n. f. A species of parsley; which see.

CELESTIAL. adj. [from celestialis, Lat.]

1. Heavenly; relating to the superior regions.

Their stay, until the twelve celestial signs have brought about their annual reckoning. Shakespeare.

The ancients commonly applied celestial descriptions of other climes to their own. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. Heavenly; relating to the blessed state.

Play that had note

I nam'd my knell; whilst I sit meditating

On that celestial harmony I go to. Shakespeare.

3. Heavenly, with respect to excellence.

Canst thou pretend to fire, whom zeal inflam'd

To worship, and a power celestial nam'd? Dryden.

Telephus, his bloomy face

Glowing celestial sweet, with godlike grace. Pope.

CELESTIAL. n. f. [from the adj.] An inhabitant of heaven.

Thus affable and mild, the prince precedes,

And to the dome th' unknown celestial leads. Pope.

CEM

CELESTIALLY. adv. [from celestialis.] In a heavenly manner.

TO CELESTIFY. v. a. [from celestialis, Lat.] To give something of heavenly nature to any thing. Not used.

We should affirm, that all things were in all things, that heaven were but earth terrestrified, and earth but heaven celestified, or that each part above had influence upon its affinity below. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CELIACK. adj. [from celia, the belly.] Relating to the lower belly.

The blood moving slowly through the celiack and mesenteric arteries, produces complaints. Arbutnot on Aliments.

CELIBACY. n. f. [from celibatus, Latin.] Single life; unmarried state.

I can attribute their numbers to nothing but their frequent marriages; for they look on celibacy as an acquired state, and generally are married before twenty. Spenser.

By teaching them how to carry themselves in their relations of husbands and wives, parents and children, they have, without question, adorned the gospel, glorified God, and benefited man, much more than they could have done in the devoutest and strictest celibacy. Atterbury.

CELIBATE. n. f. [from celibatus, Lat.] Single life.

The males oblige themselves to celibate, and then multiplication is hindered. Graunt.

CELL. n. f. [from cella, Latin.]

1. A small cavity or hollow place.

The brain contains ten thousand cells,

In each some active fancy dwells. Prior.

How bees for ever, though a monarch reign,

Their separate cells and properties maintain. Pope.

2. The cave or little habitation of a religious person.

Besides, she did intend confession

At Patrick's cell this ev'n; and there she was not. Shakespeare.

Then did religion in a lazy cell,

In empty, airy contemplations dwell. Denham.

3. A small and close apartment in a prison.

4. Any small place of residence; a cottage.

Mine eyes he clos'd, but open left the cell

Of fancy, my internal sight. Milton's Par. Lost.

For ever in this humble cell

Let thee and I together dwell. Prior.

In cottages and lowly cell,

True piety neglected dwells,

Till call'd to heav'n, its native seat,

Where the good man alone is great. Somerville.

5. Little bags or bladders, where fluids, or matter of different sorts, are lodged; common both to animals and plants.

CELLAR. n. f. [from cella, Lat.] A place underground, where stores and liquors are reposit.

If this fellow had lived in the time of Cato, he would, for his punishment, have been confined to the bottom of a cellar during his life. Peachment Drawing.

CELLARAGE. n. f. [from cella.] The part of the building which makes the cellars.

Come on, you hear this fellow in the cellarage. Shakespeare.

A good ascent makes a house wholesome, and gives opportunity for cellarage. Mort. Husbandry.

CELLARIST. n. f. [from cellarius, Lat.] The butler in a religious house.

CELLULAR. adj. [from cellula, Lat.] Consisting of little cells or cavities.

CELESTITUDE. n. f. [from celestudo, Lat.] Height. Diels.

CEMENT. n. f. [from cemētum, Lat.]

1. The matter with which two bodies are made to cohere; as, mortar or glue.

Your temples burned in their cement, and your franchises confined into an auger's bore. Shakespeare.

There is a cement compounded of flower, whites of eggs, and stones powdered, that becometh hard as marble. Bacon.

You may see divers pebbles, and a crust of cement or stone between them, as hard as the pebbles themselves. Bacon.

CEN

The foundation was made of rough stone, joined together with a most firm cement; upon this was laid another layer, consisting of small stones and cement. Arbutnot on Coins.

2. Bond of union in friendship.

Let not the piece of virtue which is set

Between us, as the cement of our love,

To keep it buidled, be the ram to batter. Shakespeare.

What cement should unite heaven and earth, light and darkness? Glanville.

Look over the whole creation, and you shall see, that the band or cement, that holds together all the parts of this great and glorious fabric, is gratitude. South.

TO CEMENT. v. a. [from the noun.] To unite by means of something interposed.

But how the fear of us

May cement their divisions, and bind up

The petty difference, we yet not know. Shakespeare.

Liquid bodies have nothing to cement them; they are all loose and incoherent, and in a perpetual flux; even an heap of sand, or fine powder, will suffer no hollownes within them, though they be dry substances. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

Love with white lead cement his wings;

White lead was sent us to repair

Two brightest, brittlest earthly things,

A lady's face, and china ware. Swift.

TO CEMENT. v. n. To come into conjunction; to cohere.

When a wound is recent, and the parts of it are divided by a sharp instrument, they will, if held in close contact for some time, reunite by inosculation, and cement like one branch of a tree ingrafted on another. Sharp's Surgery.

CEMENTER. n. f. [from cement.] A person or thing that unites in society.

God having designed man for a sociable creature, furnished him with language which was to be the great instrument and cement of society. Locke.

CESSIBILITY. n. f. [from cedo, cessum, Latin.] The quality of receding, or giving way, without resistance.

If the subject stricken be of a proportionate cessibility, it seems to dull and deaden the stroke; whereas, if the thing stricken be hard, the stroke seems to lose no force, but to work a greater effect. Digby on the Soul.

CESSIBLE. adj. [from cedo, cessum, Lat.] Easy to give way.

If the parts of the stricken body be so easily cessible, as without difficulty the stroke can divide them, then it enters into such a body, till it has spent its force. Digby on the Soul.

CESSION. n. f. [cessio, Fr. cessio, Lat.]

1. Retreat; the act of giving way.

Sound is not produced without some resistance either in the air or the body percussed; for if there be a mere yielding or cession, it produceth no sound. Bacon's Natural History.

2. Resignation; the act of yielding up or quitting to another.

A parity in their council would make and secure the best peace they can with France, by a cession of Flanders to that crown, in exchange for other provinces. Temple.

CESSIONARY. adj. [from cessio.] As, a cessionary bankrupt, one who has delivered up all his effects. Martin.

CESSMENT. n. f. [from cess.] An assessment or tax. Dict.

CESSOR. n. f. [from cesso, Lat.]

In law, he that ceaseth or neglecteth so long to perform a duty belonging to him, as that by his cess, or ceasing, he incurth the danger of law, and hath, or may have the writ cessavit brought against him. Where it is said, the tenant ceaseth, such phrase is to be understood, as if it were said, the tenant ceaseth to do what he ought, or is bound to do by his land or tenement. Cowell.

CESTUS. n. f. [Latin.] The girdle of Venus.

Venus, without any ornament but her own beauties, not so much as her own cestus. Addison's Spectator.

CETACEOUS. adj. [from cete, whales, Latin.] Of the whole kind.

Such fishes as have lungs or respiration, are not without the wezzon, as whales and cetaceous animals. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

He hath created variety of these cetaceous fishes, which converse chiefly in the northern seas, whose whole body being encompassed round with a copious fat or blubber, it is enabled to abide the greatest cold of the sea-water. Ray on the Creation.

CAUT. A note in the scale of musick.

Gamut I am, the ground of all accord,

A re, to plead Hortensio's passion;

B mi Bianca, take him for thy lord,

Caut, that loves with all affection. Shakef.

CH has, in words purely English, or fully naturalized, the sound of th; a peculiar pronunciation, which is hard to describe in words. In some words derived from the French, it has the sound of th, as chaife; and, in some derived from the Greek, the sound of k, as cholrick.

CHACE. See CHASE.

Sackling.

4. To make angry; to inflame passion.

Her intercession chaf'd him so,
When she for thy repeal was suppliant,

That to close prison he commanded her. Shakef.

An offer of pardon more chafed the rage of those, who were resolved to live or die together.

Sir John Hayward.

For all that he was inwardly chafed with the heat of youth and indignation, against his own people as well as the Rhodians, he moderated himself betwixt his own rage, and the offence of his soldiers. Knolles's History of the Turks.

This chaf'd the boar, his nostrils flames expire,
And his red eyeballs roll with living fire. Dryden.

To CHAFE. v. n.

1. To rage; to fret; to fume; to rave; to boil.

Therewith he 'gan full terribly to roar,
And chaf'd at that indignity right fore.

Spenser's Hub. Tale.

He will not rejoice so much at the abuse of Falstaff, as he will chafe at the doctor's marrying my daughter. Shakespeare.

Be lion mettled, proud, and take no care,
Who chafes, who frets, or where conspirers are.

Shakespeare.

How did they fume, and stamp, and roar, and chafe,
And swear! not Addison himself was faze. Pope.

2. To fret against any thing.

Once upon a raw and gusty day,
The troubled Tyber chafing with his shores.

Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar.

The murmuring fudge,

That on th' unnumber'd idle pebbles chafes,
Cannot be heard so high. Shakef. King Lear.

CHAFE. n. f. [from the verb.] A heat; a rage; a fury; a passion; a fume; a pett; a fret; a storm.

When Sir Thomas More was speaker of the parliament, with his wisdom and eloquence he crossed a purpose of cardinal Wolsey's, that the cardinal, in a chafe, sent for him to Whitehall.

Camden's Remains.

1. The husks of corn that are separated by threshing and winnowing.

We shall be winnow'd with so rough a wind,
That ev'n our corn shall seem as light as chaff,
And good from bad find no partition.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Pleasure with instruction should be join'd;
So take the corn, and leave the chaff behind.

Dryden.

He set before him a sack of wheat, as it had been just threshed out of the sheaf; he then bid him pick out the chaff from among the corn, and lay it aside by itself. Spectator.

2. It is used for any thing worthless.

To CHAFER. v. n. [kauffen, Germ. to buy.] To treat about a bargain; to haggle; to bargain.

Nor rode himself to Paul's, the publick fair,
To chaffer for preferments with his gold,
Where bishopricks and sinecures are sold.

Dryden's Fables.

The chaffering with dissenters, and dodging about this or t'other ceremony, is but like opening a few wickets, and leaving them a-jar.

Swift.

1.

CHAGRIN. n. f. [chagrine, Fr.] Ill humour; vexation; fretfulness; peevishness. It is pronounced shagreen.

Here me, and touch Belinda with chagrin:
That single act gives half the world the spleen.

I grieve with the old, for so many additional inconveniences and chagrins, more than their small remain of life seemed destined to undergo.

TO CHAGRIN. v. a. [chagriner, Fr.] To vex; to put out of temper; to tease; to make uneasy.

CHAIN. n. f. [chain, Fr.]

1. A series of links fastened one within another.

And Pharaoh took off his ring, and put it upon Joseph's hand, and put a gold chain upon his neck.

2. A bond; a manacle; a fetter; something with which prisoners are bound.

Still in constraint your suffering sex remains,
Or bound in formal, or in real chains.

3. A line of links with which land is measured.

A surveyour may as soon, with his chain, measure out infinite space, as a philosopher, by the quickest flight of mind, reach it, or, by thinking, comprehend it.

4. A series linked together; as, of causes, or thoughts; a succession; a subordination.

Those who mistake the Christian religion, as to think it is only a chain of fatal degrees, to deny all liberty of man's choice toward good or evil.

As there is pleasure in the right exercise of any faculty, so especially in that of right reasoning; which is still the greater, by how much the consequences are more clear, and the chains of them more long.

TO CHAIN. v. a. [form the noun.]

1. To fasten or bind with a chain.

They repeal daily any wholesome act established against the rich, and provide more piercing statutes daily to chain up and restrain the poor.

The admiral feeling the mouth of the haven chain'd, and the castles full of ordnance, and strongly manned, durst not attempt to enter.

4. To unite.

O Warwick, I do bend my knee with thine,
And in this vow do chain my soul with thine.

CHAINPUMP. n. f. [from chain and pump.] A pump used in large English vessels, which is double, so that one rises as the other falls. It yields a great quantity of water, works easily, and is easily mended, but takes up a great deal of room, and makes a disagreeable noise.

It is not long since the striking of the topmast, a wonderful great ease to great ships both at sea and in harbour, hath been devised, together with the chainpump, which takes up twice as much water as the ordinary did; and we have lately added the bonnet and the drabble.

CHAINSHOT. n. f. [from chain and shot.] Two bullets or half bullets, fastened together by a chain, which, when they fly open, cut away whatever is before them.

In sea fights oftentimes, a buttock, the brawn of the thigh, and the calf the leg, are torn off by the chainshot, and splinters.

CHAINWORK. n. f. [from chain and work.] Work with open spaces like the links of a chain.

Nets of chequerwork, and wreaths of chainwork, for the chapters which were upon the tops of the pillars.

CHAIR. n. f. [chair, Fr.]

1. A moveable seat.

Whether thou choose Cervantes' serious air,
Or laugh and shake in Rabelais' easy chair,
Or praise the court, or magnify mankind,
Or thy griev'd country's copper chains unbind.

If a chair be defined a seat for a single person, with a back belonging to it, then a stool is a seat for a single person, without a back.

2. A seat of justice, or of authority.

He makes for England, here to claim the crown.—
—Is the chair empty? Is the sword unfurled?
Is the king dead?

3. A line of links with which land is measured.

Show thy descent by gazing 'gainst the sun;
For chair and dukedom, throne and kingdom, say;
Either that's thine, or else thou wert not his.

The honour'd gods
Keep Rome in safety, and the chairs of justice
Supply with worthy men.

Her grace sat down to rest a while,
In a rich chair of state.

The committee of the commons appointed Mr. Pym to take the chair.

In this high temple, on a chair of state,
The seat of audience, old Latinus sat.

3. A vehicle born by men; a sedan.

And, that he calls for drink, I'll have prepar'd him

A calice for the nonce.

2. It is generally used for a cup used in acts of worship.

All the church at that time did not think emblematical figures unlawful ornaments of cups or calices.

CHALICED. adj. [from calix, Lat. the cup of a flower.] Having a cell or cup: applied by Shakespeare to a flower, but now obsolete.

Hark, hark! the lark at heaven's gate sings,
And Phoebus 'gins arise,
His steeds to water at these springs,
On calic'd flowers that lies.

CHALK. n. f. [cealc; cealcetan, Sax. calch, Welch.]

Chalk is a white fossil, usually reckoned a stone, but by some ranked among the boles. It is used in medicine as an absorbent, and is celebrated for curing the heartburn.

He maketh all the stones of the altar as chalk stones, that are beaten in sunder.

Chalk is of two sorts; the hard, dry, strong chalk, which is best for lime; and a soft, unctuous chalk, which is best for lands, because it easily dissolves with rain and frost.

With chalk I first describe a circle here,
Where these ethereal spirits must appear.

TO CHALK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To rub with chalk.

The beastly rabble then came down
From all the garrets in the town,
And stalls and shopboards in vast swarms,
With new chalk'd bills and rusty arms.

2. To manure with chalk.

Land that is chalked, if it is not well dunged, will receive but little benefit from a second chalking.

3. To mark or trace out as with chalk.

Being not proud by ancestry, whose grace
Chalks successors their way.

His own mind chalked out to him the just proportions and measures of behaviour to his fellow-creatures.

With these helps I might at least have chalked out a way for others, to amend my errors in a like design.

The time falls within the compass here chalk'd out by nature, very punctually.

CHALK.

CHALK-CUTTER. n. f. [from chalk and cut.]
A man that digs chalk.

Shells, by the seamen called chalk eggs, are dug up commonly in the chalk-pits, where the chalk-cutters drive a great trade with them. Woodward.

Whom I may rather challenge for unkindness. Shaksp.

4. [In law.] To object to the impartiality of any one. [See the noun.]

Though only twelve are sworn, yet twenty-four are to be returned, to supply the defects or want of appearance of those that are challenged off, or make default. Hale.

5. To claim as due.

That divine order, whereby the pre-eminence of chiefest acceptance is by the best things worthily challenged. Hooker.

Which of you, shall we say, doth love us most?
That we our largest bounty may extend,
Where nature doth with merit challenge. Shaksp.

And so much duty as my mother shew'd
To you, preferring you before her father;
So much I challenge, that I may profess
Due to the Moor, my lord. Shaksp.

Had you not been their father, these white flakes
Did challenge pity of them. Shaksp.

So when a tyger sucks the bullock's blood,
A famish'd lion, issuing from the wood,
Roars loudly fierce, and challenges the food. Dryden.

Hast thou yet drawn o'er young Juba?
That still would recommend thee more to Cæsar,
And challenge better terms. Addison.

6. To call any one to the performance of conditions.

I will now challenge you of your promise, to give me certain rules as to the principles of blazonry. Peacham on Drawing.

CHALLENGE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A summons to combat.

I never in my life

Did hear a challenge urg'd more modestly. Shaksp.

2. A demand of something as due.

Taking for his younglings,

Left greedy eyes to them might challenge lay,
Busy with oker did the shoulders mark. Sidney.

There must be no challenge of superiority, or discountenancing of freedom. Collier on Friendship.

3. [In law.] An exception taken either against persons or things; persons, as in assize to the jurors, or any one or more of them, by the prisoner at the bar. Challenge made to the jurors, is either made to the array, or to the polls: challenge made to the array is, when the whole number is excepted against, as partially empannelled:

challenge to or by the poll, is when some one or more are excepted against, as not indifferent: challenge to the jurors is divided into challenge principal, and challenge for cause: challenge principal is that which the law allows without cause alleged, or farther examination; as a prisoner at the bar, arraigned upon felony, may peremptorily challenge to the number of twenty, one after another, of the jury empannelled upon him, alleging no cause. Cowell.

You are mine enemy, I make my challenge,
You shall not be my judge. Shaksp.

CHALLENGER. n. f. [from challenge.]

1. One that defies or summons another to combat.

Young man, have you challenged Charles the wrestler?—
No, fair princeps; he is the general challenger. Shaksp.

Death was denounc'd;
He took the summons, void of fear,
And unconcernedly cast his eyes around,
As if to find and dare the grievous challenger. Dryden.

2. One that claims superiority.

Whose worth
Stood challenger on mount of all the age,
For her perfections. Shaksp.

3. A claimant; one that requires something as of right.

Earnest challengers there are of trial, by some publick disputation. Hooker.

CHALYBEATE. adj. [from chalybs, Lat. steel.]

TO CHAMBLET. v. a. [from camelot. See CAMELOT.] To vary; to variegate.

Some have the veins more varied and chambleted; as oak, whereof waincoat is made. Bacon's Natural History.

CHAMBLET of a Horse. The joint or bending of the upper part of the hinder leg. Farrier's Dict.

CHAMELEON. n. f. [χελών, Gr.]

The chameleon has four feet, and on each foot three claws. Its tail is long; with this, as well as with its feet, it fastens itself to the branches of trees. Its tail is flat, its nose long, in an obtuse point; its back is sharp, its skin plaited, and jagged like a saw from the neck to the last joint of the tail, and upon its head it has something like a comb; like a fish, it has no neck. Some have asserted, that it lives only upon air; but it has been observed to feed on flies, caught with its tongue, which is about ten inches long, and three thick; made of white flesh, round, but flat at the end; or hollow and open, resembling an elephant's trunk. It also shrinks, and grows longer. This animal is said to assume the colour of those things to which it is applied; but our modern observers assure us, that its natural colour, when at rest and in the shade, is a bluish grey; though some are yellow, and others green, but both of a smaller kind. When it is exposed to the sun, the grey changes into a darker grey, inclining to dun colour, and its parts, which have least of the light upon them, are changed into spots of different colours. The grain of its skin, when he light doth not shine upon it, is like cloth mixed with many colours. Sometimes when it is handled, it seems speckled with dark spots, inclining to green. If it be put upon a black hat, it appears to be of a violet colour; and sometimes if it be wrapped up in linen, it is white; but it changes colour only in some parts of the body.

C H A

Calmet.

A chameleon is a creature about the bigness of an ordinary lizard; his head unproportionably big, and his eyes great; he moveth his head without writhing of his neck, which is inflexible, as a hog doth; his back crooked, his skin spotted with little tumours, less eminent nearer the belly; his tail slender and long; on each foot he hath five fingers, three on the outside, and two on the inside; his tongue of a marvellous length in respect of his body, and hollow at the end, which he will launch out to prey upon flies; of colour green, and of a dusky yellow, brighter and whiter towards the belly; yet spotted with blue, white, and red.

Bacon's Natural History.

I can add colours ev'n to the chameleon;
Change shapes with Proteus, for advantage.

Shakespeare.

One part devours the other, and leaves not so much as a mouthful of that popular air, which the chameleons gape after.

Decay of Pity.

The thin chameleon, fed with air, receives
The colour of the thing to which he cleaves.

Dryden.

As the chameleon, which is known
To have no colours of his own,
But borrows from his neighbour's hue
His white, or black, or green, or blue. Prior.
To CHAMFER. v. a. [chamfrer, Fr.] To channel; to make furrows or gutters upon a column.
CHAMFER. } n. f. [from To chamfer.] A small CHAMFRET. } furrow or gutter on a column.
CHAMLET. n. f. [See CAMELOT.] Stuff made originally of camel's hair.

To make a chamlet, draw five lines, waded over thwart, if your diapering consist of a double line.

Peacham on Drawing.

CHAMOIS. n. f. [chamois, Fr.] An animal of the goat kind, whose skin is made into soft leather, called among us skammy.

These are the beasts which you shall eat; the ox, the sheep, and wild ox, and the chamois. Deut.

CHAMOMILE. n. f. [χουμαϊλον] An odoriferous plant.

Cool violets, and orpine growing still,
Embathed balm, and cheerful galingale,
Fresh costmary and breathful chamomile,
Dull poppy, and drink quick'ning fetuale. Spenser.
For though the chamomile, the more it is trodden on the faster it grows; yet youth, the more it is wasted, the sooner it wears.

Shakespeare.

Possit drink with chamomile flowers.

Floyer on the Cambrus.

To CHAMP. v. a. [champayer, Fr.]

1. To bite with a frequent action of the teeth. Coffee and opium are taken down, tobacco but in smoke, and betel is but champed in the mouth with a little lime.

Bacon.

The fiend reply'd not, overcome with rage;
But, like a proud steed rein'd, went haughty on,
Champing his iron curb.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

At his command

The steed's caparison'd with purple stand,
And champ betwixt their teeth the foaming gold.

Dryden.

2. To devour, with violent action of the teeth.

A tobacco pipe happened to break in my mouth, and the pieces left such a delicious roughness on my tongue, that I champed up the remaining part.

Spenser.

To CHAMP. v. n. To perform frequently the action of biting.

Muttering and champing, as though his cud had troubled him, he gave occasion to Musidorus to come near him.

Sidney.

They began to repent of that they had done, and irresolutely to champ upon the bit they had taken into their mouths.

Hooker.

His jaws did not answer equally to one another;

but by his frequent motion and champing with them, it was evident they were neither luxated nor fractured.

Wijeman.

CHAMPAIGN. n. f. [campagne, Fr.] A flat open country.

In the abuses of the customs, meseems, you have a fair champaign laid open to you, in which you may at large stretch out your discourse.

Spenser's State of Ireland.

Of all these bounds,

With shadowy forests and with champaigns rich'd
We make thee lady.

Shakespeare.

If two bordering princes have their territory meeting on an open champaign, the more mighty will continually seek occasion to extend his limits unto the further border thereof.

Raleigh.

Sir John Norris maintained a retreat without disarray, by the space of some miles, part of the way champaign, unto the city of Gaunt, with less loss of men than the enemy.

Bacon.

From his side two rivers flow'd,
Th' one winding, th' other streight, and left between

Fair champaign, with less rivers interven'd.

Milton.

CHAMPERTORS. n. f. [from champerty. In law.] Such as move suits, or cause them to be moved, either by their own or others procurement, and pursue, at their proper costs, to have part of the land in contest, or part of the gains.

Corvel.

CHAMPERTY. n. f. [champart, Fr. in law.] A maintenance of any man in his suit while depending, upon condition to have part of the thing when it is recovered.

Corvel.

CHAMPIGNON. n. f. [champignon, Fr.] A kind of mushroom.

He viler friends with doubtful mushrooms treats,
Secure for you, himself champignons eats.

Dryden.

It has the resemblance of a large champignon before it is opened, branching out into a large round knob.

Woodward.

CHAMPION. n. f. [champion, Fr. campio, low Lat.]

1. A man who undertakes a cause at single combat.

In many armies, the matter should be tried by duel between two champions.

Bacon.

For hot, cold, moist, and dry, four champions fierce,

Strive here mastery, and to battle bring
Their embryon atoms.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

O light of Trojans, and support of Troy,
Thy father's champion, and thy country's joy!

Dryden.

At length the adverse admirals appear,
The two bold champions of each country's right.

Dryden.

2. A hero; a stout warrior; one bold in contest.

A stouter champion never handled sword. Shaksp.

This makes you incapable of conviction, and they applaud themselves as zealous champions for truth, when indeed they are contending for error.

Locke.

3. In law.

In our common law, champion is taken no less for him that trieth the combat in his own case, than for him that fighteth in the case of another.

Corvel.

To CHAMPION. v. a. [from the noun.] To challenge to the combat.

The feed of Banquo, kings!
Rather than so, come fate, into the list,
And champion me to th' utterance.

Shakespeare.

CHANCE. n. f. [chance, Fr.]

1. Fortune; the cause of fortuitous events.

As th' unthought accident is guilty
Of what we wildly do, so we profess
Ourselves to be the slaves of chance,

Shakespeare.

Of every wind that blows.

The only man of all that chance could bring
To meet my arms, was worth the conquering.

Dryden.

Chance is but a mere name, and really nothing in itself; a conception of our minds, and only a compendious way of speaking, whereby we would express, that such effects as are commonly attributed to chance, were verily produced by their true and proper causes, but without their design to produce them.

Bentley.

2. Fortune; the act of fortune; what fortune may bring: applied to persons.

These things are commonly not observed, but left to take their chance.

Bacon's Essays.

3. Accident; casual occurrence; fortuitous event.

To say a thing is a chance or casualty, as it relates to second causes, is not profaneness, but a great truth; as signifying no more, than that there are some events besides the knowledge and power of second agents.

South.

The beauty I beheld has struck me dead;
Unknowingly she strikes, and kills by chance;
Poison is in her eyes, and death in every glance.

Dryden.

All nature is but art, unknown to thee;
All chance direction, which thou canst not see.

Pope.

4. Event; success; luck: applied to things.

Now we'll together, and the chance of goodness
Be like our warranted quarrel!

Shakespeare.

5. Misfortune; unlucky accident.

You were us'd

To say, extremity was the trier of spirits,
That common chances common men could bear.

Shakespeare.

6. Possibility of any occurrence.

A chance, but chance may lead, where I may meet
Some wand'ring spirit of heav'n, by fountain side,
Or in thick shade retir'd.

Milton's Par. Lost.

Then your ladyship might have a chance to escape this address.

Swift.

CHANCE. adj. [It is seldom used but in composition.] Happening by chance.

Now should they part, malicious tongues would say,
They met like chance companions on the way.

Dryden.

I would not take the gift,
Which, like a toy dropt from the hands of fortune,
Lay for the next chance comer.

Dryden.

To CHANCE. v. n. [from the noun.] To happen; to fall out; to fortune.

Think what a chance thou chancest on; but think;—

Thou hast thy mistress still.

Shakespeare.

How chance thou art not with the prince thy brother?

Shakespeare.

Ay, Cæsa, tell us what hath chanc'd to day,
That Cæsar looks so sad.

Shakespeare.

He chanced upon divers of the Turks' victuals, whom he easily took.

Knutles's History of the Turks.

I chose the safer sea, and chanc'd to find,
A river's mouth, impervious to the wind.

Pope's Odyssey.

CHANCEFUL. adj. [chance and full.] Hazardous. Out of use.

Myself would offer you t' accompany
In this adventurous chanceful jeopardy.

Spenser.

CHANCE-MEDLEY. n. f. [from chance and medley.] In law.

The casual slaughter of a man, not altogether without the fault of the slayer, when ignorance or negligence is joined with the chance; as if a man

lop trees by an highway-side, by which many usually travel, and cast down a bough, not giving warning to take heed thereof, by which bough one passing by is slain: in this case he offends, because he gave no warning, that the party might have taken heed to himself.

Corvel.

If such an one should have the ill hap, at any time, to strike a man dead with a smart saying, it ought, in all reason and conscience, to be judged but a chance-medley.

South.

CHANCEABLE. adj. [from chance.] Accidental.

The trial thereof was cut off by the chanceable coming thither of the king of Iberia.

Sidney.

CHANCEL. n. f. [from cancelli, L. t. latices, with which the chancel was inclosed.] The eastern part of the church, in which the altar is placed.

Whether

Whether it be allowable or no, that the minister should say service in the chancel. Hooker.

The chancel of this church is vaulted with a single stone of four feet in thickness, and an hundred and fourteen in circumference. Addison on Italy.

CHANCELLOR, n. f. [cancellarius, Lat. cancellarius, Fr. from cancellare, litteras vel scriptum linea per medium ducta dammare, and seemeth of itself likewise to be derived à cancellis, which signify all one with crosses, a lattice; that is, a thing made of wood or iron bars, laid crossways one over another, so that a man may see through them in and out. It may be thought that judgment seats were compassed in with bars, to defend the judges and other officers from the puffs of the multitude, and yet not to hinder any man's view.

Quæritus regni tibi cancellarius Angli,

Primus solliciti mente petendus erit.

Hic est, qui regni leges cancellat iniquas,

Et mandata pii principis æqua facit.

Verbes of Nigel de Wateke to the bishop of Ely, chancellor to Richard I.]

1. The highest judge of the law.

Cancellarius, at the first, signified the registers or actuaries in court; grapharios, scil. qui conscribendis & excipiendis iudicium actis dant operam. But this name is greatly advanced, and not only in other kingdoms but in this, is given to him that is the chief judge in causes of property; for the chancellor hath power to moderate and temper the written law, and subjeeth himself only to the law of nature and conscience. Corvel.

Turn out, you rogue, how like a beast you lie: Go, buckle to the law: Is this an hour To stretch your limbs? you'll ne'er be chancellor. Dryden jun.

Aristides was a person of the strictest justice, and best acquainted with the laws, as well as forms of their government; so that he was in a manner chancellor of Athens. Swift.

2. CHANCELLOR in the Ecclesiastical Court. A bishop's lawyer; a man trained up in the civil and canon law, to direct the bishops in matters of judgment, relating as well to criminal as to civil affairs in the church. Ayliffe's Parergon.

3. CHANCELLOR of a Cathedral. A dignitary, whose office it is to superintend the regular exercise of devotion. Swift.

4. CHANCELLOR of the Exchequer. An officer who sits in that court, and in the exchequer chamber. He has power, with others, to compound for forfeitures on penal statutes, bonds and recognizances entered into by the king. He has great authority in managing the royal revenue, and in matters of first fruits. The court of equity is in the exchequer chamber, and is held before the lord treasurer, chancellor, and barons, as that of common law before the barons only. Corvel, Chambers.

5. CHANCELLOR of an University. The principal magistrate, who, at Oxford, holds his office during life, but, at Cambridge, he may be elected every three years.

6. CHANCELLOR of the Order of the Garter, and other military orders, is an officer who seals the commissions and mandates of the chapter and assembly of the knights, keeps the register of their deliberations, and delivers their acts under the seal of the order. Chambers.

CHANCELLORSHIP, n. f. The office of chancellor.

The Sunday after More gave up his chancellorship of England, he came himself to his wife's pew, and used the usual words of his gentleman-usher, 'Madam, my lord is gone.' Camden.

CHANCERY, n. f. [from chancellor; probably chancery; then shortened.] The court of equity and conscience, moderating the rigour of other courts, that are tied to the letter of the law; whereof the lord chancellor of England is the chief judge, or the lord keeper of the great seal. Corvel.

The contumacy and contempt of the party must be signified in the court of chancery, by the bishop's letters under the seal episcopal. Ayliffe's Parergon.

CHANCERE, n. f. [chancre, Fr.] An ulcer usually arising from venereal maladies.

It is possible he was not well cured, and would have relapsed with a chancre. Wifeman.

CHANCEROUS, adj. [from chancre.] Having the qualities of a chancre; ulcerous.

You may think I am too strict in giving so many internals in the cure of so small an ulcer as a chancre, or rather a chanerous callus. Wifeman.

CHANDELIER, n. f. [chandelier, Fr.] A branch for candles.

CHANDLER, n. f. [chandelier, Fr.] An artisan whose trade it is to make candles, or a person who sells them.

The fact that thou hast drunken me, would have bought me lights as good cheap at the dearest chandlers in Europe. Shakespeare.

But whether black or lighter dies are worn, The chandler's basket, on his shoulder born, With tallow spots thy coat. Gay.

CHANDLERIN, n. f. [old French.] The forepart of the head of a horse, which extends from under the ears, along the interval between the eyebrows down to his nose. Farrier's Dict.

To CHANGE, v. a. [changer, Fr. cambia, Lat.]

1. To put one thing in the place of another. He that cannot look into his own estate, had need choose well whom he employeth, and change them often; for new are more timorous, and less subtle. Bacon's Essays.

2. To quit any thing for the sake of another: with for before the thing taken or received. Persons grown up in the belief of any religion, cannot change that for another, without applying their understanding duly to consider and compare both. South.

The French and we still change; but here's the curse, They change for better, and we change for worse. Dryden.

3. To give and take reciprocally: with the particle with before the person to whom we give, and from whom we take. To secure thy content, look upon those thousands, with whom thou wouldst not, for any interest, change thy fortune and condition. Taylor's Rule of living Holy.

4. To alter; to make other than it was. Thou shalt not see me bluth, Nor change my countenance for this arrest; A heart unspotted is not easily daunted. Shakespeare. Whatsoever is brought upon thee, take cheerfully, and be patient when thou art changed to a low estate. Ecclus.

For the elements were changed in themselves by a kind of harmony, like as in a psaltery notes change the name of the tune, and yet are always founds. Wifdom.

5. To mend the disposition or mind. I would the were in heaven, so the could Intreat some pow'r to change this curriish Jew. Shakespeare.

6. To discount a larger piece of money into several smaller. A shopkeeper might be able to change a guinea, or a moidore, when a customer comes for a crown's worth of goods. Swift.

7. To change a horse, or to change hand, is to turn or bear the horse's head from one hand to the other, from the left to the right, or from the right to the left. Farrier's Dict.

To CHANGE, v. n. 1. To undergo change; to suffer alteration: as, his fortune may soon change, though he is now so secure. One Julia, that his changing thought forgot, Would better fit his chamber. Shakespeare.

2. To change, as the moon; to begin a new monthly revolution. I am weary of this moon; would he would change. Shakespeare.

CHANGE, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. An alteration of the state of any thing. Since I saw you last, There is a change upon you. Shakespeare.

2. A succession of one thing in the place of another.

O wondrous changes of a fatal scene, Still varying to the last! Dryden. Nothing can cure this part of ill breeding, but change and variety of company, and that of persons above us. Locke.

Empires by various turns shall rise and set; While thy abandon'd tribes shall only know A different master, and a change of time. Prior. Hear how Timotheus' various lays surprize, And bid alternate passions fall and rise! While, at each change, the son of Libyan Jove Now burns with glory, and then melts with love. Pope.

3. The time of the moon in which it begins a new monthly revolution. Take seeds or roots, and set some of them immediately after the change, and others of the same kind immediately after the full. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

4. Novelty; a state different from the former. The hearts Of all his people shall revolt from him, And kiss the lips of unacquainted change. Shakespeare. Our fathers did, for change, to France repair, And they, for change, will try our English air. Dryden.

5. [In ringing.] An alteration of the order in which a set of bells is sounded. Four bells admit twenty-four changes in ringing, and five bells one hundred and twenty. Holder's Elements of Speech. Easy it may be to contrive new postures, and ring other changes upon the same bells. Norris.

6. That which makes a variety; that which may be used for another of the same kind. I will now put forth a riddle unto you; if you can find it out, then I will give you thirty sheets, and thirty change of garments. Judges.

7. Small money, which may be given for larger pieces. Wood buys up our old halfpence, and from thence the present want of change arises; but supposing not one farthing of change in the nation, five and twenty thousand pounds would be sufficient. Swift.

8. Change for exchange; a place where persons meet to traffick and transact mercantile affairs. The bar, the bench, the change, the schools and pulpits are full of quacks, jugglers, and plagiarists. L'Estrange.

CHANGEABLE, adj. [from change.] 1. Subject to change; fickle; inconstant.

A steady mind will admit steady methods and counsels; there is no measure to be taken of a changeable humour. L'Estrange.

As I am a man, I must be changeable; and sometimes the gravest of us all are so, even upon ridiculous accidents. Dryden.

2. Possible to be changed. The fibrous or vascular parts of vegetables seem scarce changeable in the alimentary duct. Arbutnot on Aliments.

3. Having the quality of exhibiting different appearances. Now the taylor make thy doublet of changeable taffata; for thy mind is a very opal. Shakespeare.

CHANGEABLENESS, n. f. [from changeable.] 1. Inconstancy; fickleness.

At length he betrothed himself to one worthy to be liked, if any worthiness might excuse so unworthy a changeableness. Sidney.

There is no temper of mind more unmanly than that changeableness with which we are too justly branded by all our neighbours. Addison's Freeholders.

2. Susceptibility of change. If how long they are to continue in force, be no where expressed, then have we no light to direct our judgment concerning the changeableness or immutability of them, but considering the nature and quality of such laws. Hooker.

CHANGEABLY, adv. [from changeable.] Inconstantly.

CHANGEFUL, adj. [from change and full.] Full of change; inconstant; uncertain; mutable; subject to variation; fickle.

VOL. I. NO. 8. 11 UR.

CHA

Unsound plots, and *change*ful orders, are daily devised for her good, yet never effectually prosecuted.

Britain, *change*ful as a child at play,
Now calls in princes, and now turns away. Pope.
CHA'NGELING. n. f. [from change; the word arises from an odd superstitious opinion, that the fairies steal away children, and put others that are ugly and stupid in their places.]

1. A child left or taken in the place of another.
And her base elfin breed there for thee left:
Such men do changings call, so chang'd by fairies theft.

She, as her attendant, hath
A lovely boy stol'n from an Indian king;
She never had so sweet a changing. Shakespeare.

2. An idiot; a fool; a natural.
Changings and fools of heav'n, and thence shut out,

Wildly we roam in discontent about.
Would any one be a changing, because he is less determined by wife considerations than a wife man?

3. One apt to change; a waverer.
Of fickle changings and poor discontents
That gape and rub the elbow at the news
Of hurly-burly innovation.

'Twas not long Before from world to world they swung;
As they had turn'd from side to side,
And as they changings liv'd, they died. Hudibras.
4. Any thing changed and put in the place of another: in ludicrous speech.

I folded the writ up in form of the other,
Subscrib'd it, gave the impression, plac'd it safely.
The changing never known.

CHA'NGER. n. f. [from change.] One that is employed in changing or discounting money; money-changer.

CHA'NNEL. n. f. [canal, Fr. canalis Lat.]
1. The hollow bed of running waters.
It is not so easy, now that things are grown into an habit, and have their certain course, to change the channel, and turn their streams another way.

Draw them to Tyber's bank, and weep your tears
Into the channel, till the lowest stream
Do kiss the most exalted shores of all.

So th' injur'd sea, which, from her wanted course,
To gain some acres, avarice did force;
If the new banks, neglected once, decay,
No longer will from her old channel stay.

Had not the said strata been dislocated, some of them elevated, and others depressed, there would have been no cavity or channel to give reception to the water of the sea.
The tops of mountains and hills will be continually washed down by the rains, and the channels of rivers abraded by the streams.
2. Any cavity drawn longways.
Complaint and hot desires, the lover's hell,
And scalding tears, that wore a channel where they fell.

3. A strait or narrow sea, between two countries: as the British Channel between Britain and France; St. George's Channel between Britain and Ireland.

4. A gutter or furrow of a pillar.
To CHA'NNEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut any thing in channels.

No more shall trenching war channel her fields,
Nor bruise her flowrets with the armed hoofs
Of hostile paces.
The body of this column is perpetually channelled, like a thick plaited gown.

Torrents, and loud impetuous cataracts,
Roll down the lofty mountain's channel'd sides,
And to the vale convey their foaming tides.

To CHANT. v. a. [chanter, Fr.]
1. To sing.

Wherein the cheerful birds of sundry kind
To chant sweet music.

2. To celebrate by song.

The poets chant it in the theatres, the shepherds in the mountains.

3. To sing in the cathedral service,
To CHANT. v. n. To sing; to make melody with the voice.

They chant to the sound of the viol, and invent to themselves instruments of music. Amos, vi. 7.
Heav'n heard his song, and hasten'd his relief;
And chang'd to snowy plumes his hoary hair,
And wing'd his flight, to chant aloft in air.

CHANT. n. f. [from the verb.] Song; melody.
A pleasant grove,
With chant of tuneful birds resounding loud.

CHAN'TER. n. f. [from chant.] A singer; a songster.
You curious chanters of the wood,
That warble forth dame Nature's lays.
Jove's etherial lays, resistless fire,
The chanter's soul, and raptur'd song inspire,
Instinct divine! nor blame severe his choice,
Warbling the Grecian woes with harp and voice.

CHAN'TICLEER. n. f. [from chanter and clair, Fr.] The name given to the cock, from the clearness and loudness of his crow.
And cheerful chan'ticleer, with his note shrill,
Had warn'd once, that Phoebus' fiery car
In haste was climbing up the eastern hill.

Hark, hark, I hear
The strain of strutting chan'ticleer.
Stay, the cheerful chan'ticleer
Tells you that the time is near.

These verses were mentioned by Chaucer, in the description of the fuddon stir, and panical fear, when Chan'ticleer the cock was carried away by Reynard the fox.
Within this homestead liv'd without a peer,
For crowing loud, the noble chan'ticleer.

CHAN'TRESS. n. f. [from chant.] A woman singer.
Sweet bird, that shunn'st the noise of folly,
Most musical, most melancholy,
Thee, chan'tress of the woods among,
I woo to hear thy even-song.

CHAN'TRY. n. f. [from chant.]
Chantry is a church or chapel endowed with lands, or other yearly revenue, for the maintenance of one or more priests, daily to sing mass for the souls of the donors, and such others as they appoint.
Now go with me, and with this holy man,
Into the chantry by;
And, underneath that consecrated roof,
Plight me the full assurance of your faith.

CHAOS. n. f. [chaos, Lat. χάος.]
1. The mass of matter supposed to be in confusion before it was divided by the creation into its proper classes and elements.
The whole universe would have been a confused chaos, without beauty or order.
2. Confusion; irregular mixture.
Had I followed the worst, I could not have brought church and state to such a chaos of confusions, as some have done.
Their reason sleeps, but mimic fancy wakes, Supplies her parts, and wild ideas takes
From words and things, ill sorted and misjoin'd,
The anarchy of thought, and chaos of the mind.

3. Any thing where the parts are undistinguished.
We shall have nothing but darkness and a chaos within, whatever order and light there be in things without us.
Pleas'd with a work, where nothing's just or fit,
One glaring chaos and wild heap of wit.

CHAOTICK. adj. [from chaos.] Resembling chaos; confused.
When the terraqueous globe was in a chaotick state, and the earthy particles subside, then those several beds were, in all probability, reposit in the earth.

To CHAP. v. a. [kappen, Dutch, to cut: This word seems originally the same with chap; nor were they probably distinguished at first, otherwise than by accident; but they have now a meaning something different, though referable to the same original sense.] To break into hiatus, or gapings.

CHA

It weakened more and more the arch of the earth, drying it immoderately, and chapping it in sundry places.

Then would unbalance'd heat licentious reign,
Crack the dry hill, and chap the ruiset plain.

CHAP. n. f. [from the verb.] A cleft; an aperture; an opening; a gaping; a chink.

What moisture the heat of the summer sucks out of the earth, it is repaid in the rains of the next winter; and what chaps are made in it, are filled up again.

CHAP. n. f. [This is not often used, except by anatomists, in the singular.] The upper or under part of a beast's mouth.

Froth fills his chaps, he sends a grunting sound,
And part he churns, and part befoams the ground.

The nether chap in the male skeleton is half an inch broader than in the female.

CHAPE. n. f. [chappe, Fr.]
1. The catch of any thing by which it is held in its place; as the hook of a scabbard by which it sticks in the belt; the point by which a buckle is held to the back strap.

This is Monsieur Parolles, that had the whole theory of the war in the knot of his scarf, and the practice in the chape of his dagger.

2. A brags or silver tip or case, that strengthens the end of the scabbard of a sword.

CHAPEL. n. f. [capella, Lat.]
A chapel is of two sorts, either adjoining to a church, as a parcel of the same, which men of worth build, or else separate from the mother church, where the parish is wide, and is commonly called a chapel of ease, because it is built for the ease of one or more parishioners, that dwell too far from the church, and is served by some inferior curate, provided for at the charge of the rector, or of such as have benefit by it, as the composition or custom is.

She went in among those few trees, so closed in the tops together, as they might seem a little chapel.

Will you dispatch us here under this tree, or shall we go with you to your chapel?

Where truth erecteth her church, he helps error to rear up a chapel hard by.

A chapel will I build with large endowment.

A free chapel is such as is founded by the king of England.

CHAPELESS. adj. [from chape.] Wanting a chape.

An old rusty sword, with a broken hilt, and *chapel*less, with two broken points.

CHAPELLANY. n. f. [from chapel.]
A chapellany is usually said to be that which does not subsist of itself, but is built and founded within some other church, and is dependent thereon.

CHAPELRY. n. f. [from chapel.] The jurisdiction or bounds of a chapel.

CHAPERON. n. f. [French.] A kind of hood or cap worn by the knights of the garter in their habits.

I will omit the honourable habiliments, as robes of state, parliament robes, chaperons, and caps of state.

CHAFFALN. adj. [from chap and faln.] Having the mouth shrunk.

A chaffaln beaver loosely hanging by the cloven helm.

CHAPTER. n. f. [chapiteau, Fr.] The upper part or capital of a pillar.

He overlaid their chapters and their fillets with gold.

CHAPELAIN. n. f. [capellanus, Latin.]

were they probably distinguished at first, otherwise than by accident; but they have now a meaning something different, though referable to the same original sense.] To break into hiatus, or gapings.

It weakened more and more the arch of the earth, drying it immoderately, and chapping it in sundry places.

Then would unbalance'd heat licentious reign,
Crack the dry hill, and chap the ruiset plain.

CHAP. n. f. [from the verb.] A cleft; an aperture; an opening; a gaping; a chink.

What moisture the heat of the summer sucks out of the earth, it is repaid in the rains of the next winter; and what chaps are made in it, are filled up again.

CHAP. n. f. [This is not often used, except by anatomists, in the singular.] The upper or under part of a beast's mouth.

Froth fills his chaps, he sends a grunting sound,
And part he churns, and part befoams the ground.

The nether chap in the male skeleton is half an inch broader than in the female.

CHAPE. n. f. [chappe, Fr.]
1. The catch of any thing by which it is held in its place; as the hook of a scabbard by which it sticks in the belt; the point by which a buckle is held to the back strap.

This is Monsieur Parolles, that had the whole theory of the war in the knot of his scarf, and the practice in the chape of his dagger.

2. A brags or silver tip or case, that strengthens the end of the scabbard of a sword.

CHAPEL. n. f. [capella, Lat.]
A chapel is of two sorts, either adjoining to a church, as a parcel of the same, which men of worth build, or else separate from the mother church, where the parish is wide, and is commonly called a chapel of ease, because it is built for the ease of one or more parishioners, that dwell too far from the church, and is served by some inferior curate, provided for at the charge of the rector, or of such as have benefit by it, as the composition or custom is.

She went in among those few trees, so closed in the tops together, as they might seem a little chapel.

Will you dispatch us here under this tree, or shall we go with you to your chapel?

Where truth erecteth her church, he helps error to rear up a chapel hard by.

A chapel will I build with large endowment.

A free chapel is such as is founded by the king of England.

With reeky thanks and yellow chapless bones.

CHA'PLET. n. f. [chaplet, Fr.]

1. A garland or wreath to be worn about the head.

Upon old Hyems' chin, and icy crown,
An od'rous chaplet of sweet summer's buds,
Is, as in mockery, set. Shakespeare.

I strangely long to know,
Whether they nobler chaplets wear,
Those that their mistresses' scorn did bear,
Or those that were us'd kindly. Suckling.

All the quire was grac'd
With chaplets green, upon their foreheads plac'd.
Dryden.

The winding ivy chaplet to invade,
And folded fern, that your fair forehead shade.

They made an humble chaplet for the king.
Swift.

2. A string of beads used in the Romish church for keeping an account of the number rehearsed of pater-nosters and ave-marias. A different sort of chaplets is also used by the Mahometans.

3. [In architecture.] A little moulding carved into round beads, pearls, or olives.

4. [In horsemanship.] A couple of stirrup leathers, mounted each of them with a stirrup, and joining at top in a sort of leather buckle, which is called the head of the chaplet, by which they are fastened to the pommel of a saddle, after they have been adjusted to the length and bearing of the rider. Farrier's Dict.

5. A tuft of feathers on the peacock's head.

CHA'PMAN. n. f. [ceapman, Sax.] A cheap-mer; one that offers as a purchaser.

Fair Diomedes, you do as chapmen do,
Dispraise the thing that you intend to buy.

Yet have they seen the maps, and bought
'em too,
And understand 'em as most chapmen do.

Ben Jonson.

There was a collection of certain rare manuscripts, exquisitely written in Arabick; these were upon sale to the Jesuits at Antwerp, liquourish chapmen of such wares. Wotton.

He dressed two, and carried them to Samos, as the likeliest place for a chapman. L'Estrange.

Their chapmen they betray,
Their shops are dens, the buyer is their prey.

Dryden.

CHAPS. n. f. [from chap.]

1. The mouth of a beast of prey.

So on the downs we see
A hasten'd hare from greedy greyhound go,
And past all hope, his chaps to frustrate fo.

Sidney.
Open your mouth; you cannot tell who's your friend; open your chaps again. Shakespeare.

Their whelps at home expect the promis'd
food,

And long to temper their dry chaps in blood.

Dryden.

2. It is used in contempt for the mouth of a man.

CHA'PT. } particip. pass. [from To chap.]

CHA'PPED. }

finger without rubs, and your nail cannot find a joint; not horrid, rough, wrinkled, gaping, or chapt. Ben Jonson.

Cooling ointment made,
Which on their sun-burnt cheeks and their chapt skins they laid. Dryden's Fables.

CHA'PTER. n. f. [chapitre, Fr. from capitulum,
Latin.]

1. A division of a book.

The first book we divide into three sections;
whereof the first is these three chapters. Barnet's Theory.

If these mighty men at chapter and verse, can produce then no scripture to overthrow our church ceremonies, I will undertake to produce scripture enough to warrant them. South.

2. From hence comes the proverbial phrase, to the end of the chapter; throughout; to the end.

Money does all things; for it gives and it takes away, it makes honest men and knaves, fools and philosophers; and so forward, mutatis mutandis, to the end of the chapter. L'Estrange.

3. Chapter, from capitulum, signifieth in our common law, as in the canon law, whence it is borrowed, an assembly of the clergy of a cathedral or collegiate church. Cowel.

derived by Skinner, either from charge, Fr. business, or capc, Sax. care, or keeren, Dutch, to sweep.]
Work done by the day; a single job or task.

A meer woman, and commanded
By such poor passion, as the maid that milks,
And does the meanest chars. Shakespeare.

She, harvest done, to char work did aspire;
Meat, drink, and twopence, were her daily hire.

Dryden.

To CHAR. v. n. [from the noun.] To work at others houses by the day, without being a hired servant.

CHA'R-WOMAN. n. f. [from char and woman.]
A woman hired accidentally for odd work, or single days.

Get three or four char-women to attend you constantly in the kitchen, whom you pay only with the broken meat, a few coals, and all the cinders.

Swift.

CHA'RACTER. n. f. [character, Lat χαρακτης.]

1. A mark; a stamp; a representation.

In outward also her resembling less
His image, who made both; and less expressing
The character of that dominion giv'n O'er other creatures. Paradise Lost.

2. A letter used in writing or printing.

But his neat cookery! —
He cut our roots in characters. Shakespeare.

The purpose is peripetuous even as substance,
Whose grossness little characters sum up.

Shakespeare.
It were much to be wished, that there were throughout the world but one sort of character for each letter, to express it to the eye; and that exactly proportioned to the natural alphabet formed in the mouth. Holder's Elements of Speech.

3. The hand or manner of writing:

I found the letter thrown in at the casement of my closet. —

You know the character to be your brother's.
Shakespeare.

4. A representation of any man as to his personal qualities.

Each drew fair characters, yet none
Of these they feign'd, excels their own. Denham.
Homer has excelled all the heroic poets that ever wrote, in the multitude and variety of his characters; every god that is admitted into his poem, acts a part which would have been suitable to no other deity. Addison.

5. An account of any thing as good or bad.
This subterraneous passage is much mended,
since Seneca gave so bad a character of it.

Addison on Italy.
6. The person with his assemblage of qualities;
a personage.

In a tragedy, or epick poem, the hero of the piece must be advanced foremost to the view of the reader or spectator; he must outline the rest of all the characters; he must appear the prince of them, like the sun in the Copernican system, encompassed with the less noble planets. Dryden.

7. Personal qualities; particular constitution of the mind.

Nothing so true as what you once let fall,
Most women have no characters at all. Pope.

8. Adventitious qualities impressed by a post or office.

The chief honour of the magistrate consists in maintaining the dignity of his character by suitable actions. Asterbury.

accent formerly on the second syllable.

These few precepts in thy memory
See thou character. Shakespeare.

Shew me one scar character'd on thy skin.
Shakespeare.

O Rosalind! these trees shall be my books,
And in their barks my thoughts I'll character.

Shakespeare.

The pleasing poison
The visage quite transforms of him that drinks,
And th' inglorious likeness of a beast

Fixes instead, unmoulding reason's mintage, Character'd in the face. Milton.

CHARACTERISTICAL. } adj. [from character.]
CHARACTERISTICK. } ize. That which constitutes the character, or marks the peculiar properties of any person or thing.

There are several others that I take to have been likewise such, to which yet I have not ventured to prefix that characteristick distinction.

Woodward on Fossils.

The shining quality of an epick hero, his magnanimity, his constancy, his patience, his piety, or whatever characteristick virtue his poet gives him, raises our admiration. Dryden.

CHARACTERISTICALNESS. n. f. [from charac- teristick.] The quality of being peculiar to a char- acter; marking a character.

CHARACTERISTICK. n. f. That which constitutes the character; that which distinguishes any thing or person from others.

This vast invention exerts itself in Homer, in a manner superiour to that of any poet; it is the great and peculiar characteristick which distinguishes him from all others. Pope.

CHARACTERISTICK of a Logarithm. The same with the index or exponent.

To CHA'RACTERIZE. v. a. [from character.]

1. To give a character or an account of the personal qualities of any man.

It is some commendation, that we have avoided publickly to characterize any person, without long experience. Swift.

2. To engrave, or imprint.
They may be called anticipations, prenotions,

13. The signal to fall upon enemies.
Our author seems to found a charge, and begins like the clangour of a trumpet. Dryden.

14. The posture of a weapon fitted for the attack or combat.

Their neighing courfers, daring of the spur,
Their armed slaves in charge, their beavers down. Shakespeare.

15. A load, or burden.

Asses of great charge. Shakespeare.

16. What any thing can bear.

Take of aqua-fortis two ounces, of quick-silver two drachms, for that charge the aqua-fortis will bear, the dissolution will not bear a flint as big as a nutmeg. Bacon.

17. The quantity of powder and ball put into a gun.

18. Among farriers.

Charge is a preparation, or a sort of ointment, of the consistence of a thick decoction, which is applied to the shoulder-blades, inflammations, and sprains of horses.

A charge is of a middle nature, between an ointment and a plaster, or between a plaster and a cataplasm. Farrier's Dict.

19. In heraldry.

The charge is that which is born upon the colour, except it be a coat divided only by partition. Peacham.

CHARGEABLE. adj. [from charge.]

1. Expensive; costly.

Divers bulwarks were demolished upon the sea-coasts, in peace chargeable, and little serviceable in war. Hayward.

Neither did we eat any man's bread for nought, but wrought with labour and travel night and day, that we might not be chargeable to any of you. 2. Theff.

There was another accident of the same nature on the Sicilian side, much more pleasant, but less chargeable; for it cost nothing but wit. Wotton.

Considering the chargeable methods of their education, their numerous issue, and small income, it is next to a miracle, that no more of their children should want. Atterbury.

2. Imputable, as a debt or crime: with on.

Nothing can be a reasonable ground of despising a man, but some fault or other chargeable upon him. South.

3. Subject to charge or accusation; accusable: followed by with.

Your papers would be chargeable with something worse than indelicacy; they would be immoral. Spectator.

CHARGEABLENESS. n. f. [from chargeable.]

Expense; cost; costliness.

That which most deters me from such trials, is not their chargeableness, but their unsatisfactoriness, though they should succeed. Boyle.

CHARGEABLY. adv. [from chargeable.] Expensively; at great cost.

He procured it not with his money, but by his wisdom; not chargeably bought by him, but liberally given by others by his means. Johnson.

CHARGEFUL. adj. [charge and full.] Expensive; costly. Not in use.

Here's the note

How much your chain weighs to the utmost carot,
The fineness of the gold, the chargeful fashion. Shakespeare.

CHARGER. n. f. [from charge.] A large dish.

All the tributes land and sea affords,
Heap'd in great chargers, load our sumptuous boards. Denham.

This golden charger, snatch'd from burning Troy,
Anchises did in sacrifice employ. Dryden's Æneid.

Ev'n Lamb himself, at the most solemn feast,
Might have some chargers not exactly dress'd. King.

Nor dare they close their eyes,
Void of a bulky charger near their lips,
With which in often interrupted sleep,
Their frying blood compels to irrigate
Their dry furr'd tongues. Philips.

CHARILY. adv. [from charity.] Warily; frugally.
What paper do you take up for charity. Shakespeare

CHARINESS. n. f. [from charity.] Caution; nicety; scrupulousness.

CHARIOT. n. f. [car-rhod, Welch, a wheeled car; for it is known the Britons fought in such: charriot, Fr. carretta, Ital.]

1. A wheel carriage of pleasure, or state; a vehicle for men rather than wares.

Thy grand captain Antony Shall set thee on triumphant chariots, and Put garlands on thy head. Shakespeare.

2. A car in which men of arms were anciently placed.

He skims the liquid plains,
High on his chariot, and with loosen'd reins, Majestick moves along. Dryden's Æneid.

3. A lighter kind of coach with only front seats.

To CHARIOT. v. a. [from the noun.] To convey in a chariot. This word is rarely used.

An angel all in flames ascended
As in a fiery column charioting
His godlike presence. Milton's Agonistes.

CHARIOTEER. n. f. [from chariot.] He that drives the chariot. It is used only in speaking of military chariots, and those in the ancient public games.

The gaping charioteer beneath the wheel
Of his own car. Dryden's Fables.

The burning chariot, and the charioteer,
In bright Boötes and his wane appear. Addison on Italy.

Show us the youthful handsome charioteer,
Firm in his seat, and running his career. Prior.

CHARIOT RACE. n. f. [from chariot and race.] A sport anciently used, where chariots were driven for the prize, as now horses run.

There is a wonderful vigour and spirit in the description of the horse and chariot race. Addison.

CHARITABLE. adj. [charitable, Fr. from charité.]

1. Kind in giving alms; liberal to the poor.

He that hinders a charitable person from giving alms to a poor man, is tied to restitution, if he hindered him by fraud or violence. Taylor's Holy Living.

Shortly thou wilt behold me poor, and kneeling Before thy charitable door for bread. Rowe.

How shall we then wish, that it might be allowed us to live over our lives again, in order to fill every minute of them with charitable offices! Atterbury.

Health to himself, and to his infants bread
The lab'rer bears: what his hard heart denies,
His charitable vanity supplies. Pope.

2. Kind in judging of others; disposed to tenderness; benevolent.

How had you been my friends else? Why have you that charitable title from thousands, did you not chiefly belong to my heart? Shakespeare's Timon.

Of a politick sermon that had no divinity, the king said to bishop Andrews, Call you this a sermon? The bishop answered; By a charitable construction it may be a sermon. Bacon.

CHARITABLY. adv. [from charity.]

1. Kindly; liberally; with inclination to help the poor.

2. Benevolently; without malignity.

Nothing will more enable us to bear our crosses patiently, injuries charitably, and the labour of religion comfortably. Taylor.

'Tis best sometimes your censure to refrain,
And charitably let the dull be vain. Pope.

CHARITY. n. f. [charité, Fr. caritas, Lat.]

1. Tendernefs; kindness; love.

By thee,
Founded in reason, loyal, just, and pure,
Relations dear, and all the charities
Of father, son, and brother, first were known. Milton.

2. Goodwill; benevolence; disposition to think well of others.

My errors, I hope, are only those of charity to mankind, and such as my own charity has caused me to commit, that of others may more easily excuse. Dryden.

3. The theological virtue of universal love.

Concerning charity, the final object whereof is that incomprehensible beauty which shineth in the countenance of Christ, the Son of the living God. Hooker.

Peace, peace, for shame, if not for charity.—
—Urge neither charity nor shame to me;
Uncharitably with me have you dealt. Shakespeare.

Only add
Deeds to thy knowledge answerable, and faith;
Add virtue, patience, temperance, add love,
By name to come call'd charity, the foul
Of all the rest. Milton.

Faith believes the revelations of God; hope expects his promises; charity loves his excellencies and mercies. Taylor.

But lasting charity's more ample sway,
Nor bound by time, nor subject to decay,
In happy triumph shall for ever live. Prior.

Charity, or a love of God, which works by a love of our neighbour, is greater than faith or hope. Atterbury.

4. Liberality to the poor.

The heathen poet, in commending the charity of Dido to the Trojans, spoke like a christian. Dryden.

5. Alms; relief given to the poor.

We must incline to the king; I will look for him, and privily relieve him; go you and maintain talk with the duke, that my charity be not of him perceived. Shakespeare.

The ant did well to reprove the grasshopper for her slothfulness; but she did ill then to refuse her a charity in her distress. L'Estrange.

I never had the confidence to beg a charity. Dryden.

To CHARK. v. a. To burn to a black cinder, as wood is burned to make charcoal.

Excess, either with an apoplexy, knocks a man on the head, or, with a fever, like fire in a strong water shop, burns him down to the ground; or if it flames not out, charks him to a coal. Grew's Cosmologia Sacra.

CHARLATAN. n. f. [charlatan, Fr. ciarlatan, Ital. from ciarlare, to chatter.] A quack; a mountebank; an empirick.

CHARM. n. f. [charme, Fr. carmen, Latin.]

1. Words, or philtres, or charms, imagined to have some occult or unintelligible power.

I never knew a woman go dote upon a man; surely I think you have charms.—Not I, I assure thee; setting the attraction of my good parts aside, I have no other charms. Shakespeare.

There have been used, either barbarous words, of no sense, lest they should disturb the imagination, or words of similitude, that may second and feed the imagination; and this was ever as well in heathen charms, as in charms of later times. Bacon.

Alcyone he names amidst his prayers,
Names as a charm against the waves and wind,
Moft in his mouth, and ever in his mind. Dryden.

Antæus could, by magick charms,
Recover strength, whene'er he fell. Swift.

2. Something of power to subdue opposition, and gain the affections; something that can please irresistibly.

Well founding verses are the charm we use,
Heroick thoughts and virtue to inspire. Roscommon.

Not

Nor ever hope the queen of love
Will e'er thy fav'rite's charms improve. Prior.
To fam'd Apelles, when young Ammon brought
The darling idol of his captive heart;
And the pleas'd nymph with kind attention fat,
To have her charms recorded by his art. Waller.

But what avail her unexhausted stores,
Her blooming mountains and her sunny shores,
With all the gifts that heaven and earth impart,
The smiles of nature, and the charms of art,
While proud oppression in her vallies reigns,
And tyranny usurps her happy plains? Addison.

To CHARM, v. a. [from the noun.]

Let fall thy blade on vulnerable crests,
I bear a charmed life, which must not yield
To one of woman born. Shakespeare.

2. To make powerful by charms.
3. To summon by incantation.
Upon my knees
I charm you by my once commended beauty,
By all your vows of love, and that great vow
Which did incorporate and make us one. Shakespeare.

4. To subdue by some secret power; to amaze;
to overpower.

I, in mine own woe charm'd,
Could not find death, where I did hear him groan;
Nor feel him where he struck. Shakespeare.
Mufick the fiercest grief can charm. Pope.
5. To subdue the mind by pleasure.

'Tis your graces
That from my mute self conscience to my tongue, Charms this report out. Shakespeare.

Amoret! my lovely foe,
Tell me where thy strength does lie:
Where the pow'r that charms us fo,
In thy foul, or in thy eye? Waller.

Charm by accepting, by submitting sway. Pope.
Chloe thus the foul alarm'd,
Aw'd without sense, and without beauty charm'd. Pope.

CHARMED, adj. Enchanted.

Arcadia was the charmed circle, where all his spirits for ever should be enchanted. Sidney.

We implore thy powerful hand,
To undo the charmed band
Of true virgin here distressed. Milton.

CHARMER, n. f. [from charm.]

1. One that has the power of charms, or en-chantments.

That handkerchief
Did an Egyptian to my mother give;
She was a charmer, and could almost read
The thoughts of people. Shakespeare.

The passion you pretended,
Was only to obtain;
But when the charm is ended,
The charmer you disdain. Dryden.

2. Word of endearment among lovers.

CHARMING, partic. adj. [from charm.] Pleasing in the highest degree.

Cape of Good-Hope, found skilful pilates, using astronomical instruments, geographical charts, and compasses. Arbutnot.

CHARTER, n. f. [charta, Latin.]

1. A charter is a written evidence of things done between man and man. Charters are divided into charters of the king, and charters of private persons. Charters of the king are those, whereby the king passeth any grant to any person or more, or to any body politick: as a charter of exemption, that no man shall be empaneled on a jury; charter of pardon, whereby a man is forgiven a felony, or other offence. Cowel.

2. Any writing bestowing privileges or rights.
If you deny it, let the danger light
Upon your charter, and your city's freedom. Shakef.

It is not to be wondered, that the great charter whereby God bestowed the whole earth upon Adam, and confirmed it unto the sons of Noah, being as brief in word as large in effect, hath bred much quarrel of interpretation. Raleigh's Essay.

Here was that charter seal'd, wherein the crown
All marks of arbitrary power lays down. Denham.

She shakes the rubbish from her mounting brow,
And seems to have renew'd her charter's date,
Which Heav'n will to the death of time allow. Dryden.

God renewed this charter of man's sovereignty over the creatures. South.

3. Privilege; immunity; exemption.

I must have liberty,
Withal as large a charter as the wind,
To blow on whom I please; for so fools have;
And they that are most gauled with my folly,
They most must laugh. Shakespeare.

My mother,
Who has a charter to extol her blood,
When she does praise me, grieves me. Shakef.

CHARTER-PARTY, n. f. [chartre partie, Fr.] A paper relating to a contract, of which each party has a copy.

Charter parties, or contracts, made even upon the high sea, touching things that are not in their own nature maritime, belong not to the admiral's jurisdiction. Hale.

CHARTERED, adj. [from charter.] Invested with privileges by charter; privileged.

When he speaks,
The air, a charter'd libertine, is still. Shakespeare.

CHARY, adj. [from care.] Careful; cautious;
wary; frugal.

Over his kindred he held a wary and chary care, which bountifully was expressed, when occasion
so required. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

The charyst maid is prodigal enough,
If she unmask her beauty to the moon. Shakef.

TO CHASE, v. a. [chasser, Fr.]

1. To hunt.
It shall be as the chased roe. Isaiah.

2. To pursue as an enemy.
Mine enemies chased me sore like a bird. Lament.

3. To drive away.
He that chaseth away his mother, is a son that causeth shame. Proverbs.

4. To follow as a thing desirable.

5. To drive.
Thus chased by their brother's endless malice,
from prince to prince, and from place to place, they, for their safety, fled at last to the city of Bisennis. Knoll's History of the Turks.

When the following morn had chas'd away
The flying stars, and light restor'd the day. Dry.

TO CHASE METALS. See to ENCHASE.

CHASE, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Hunting; as, the pleasures of the chase.

2. Pursuit of any thing as game.

Whilst he was hasting, in the chase, it seems;
Of this fair couple, meets he on the way
The father of this seeming lady. Shakespeare.

There is no chase more pleasant, methinks, than to drive a thought, by good conduct, from one end of the world to another, and never to lose sight of it till it fall into eternity.

Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

3. Fitness to be hunted, appropriation to chase or sport.

Concerning the beasts of chase, whereof the buck is the first, he is called the first year a fawn.
Shakespeare.

A maid I am, and of thy virgin train;
Oh! let me still that spotless name retain,
Frequent the forests, thy chaste will obey,
And only make the beasts of chase my prey. Dryden.

4. Pursuit of an enemy, or of something noxious.

The admiral, with such ships only as could suddenly be put in readiness, made forth with them, and such as came daily in, we set upon them,
and gave them chase. Bacon.

He fallied out upon them with certain troops of horsemen, with such violence, that he overthrew them, and, having them in chase, did speedily execution. Knoll's History.

They seek that joy, which us'd to glow,
Expanded on the hero's face;
When the thick squadrons prest the foe,
And William led the glorious chase. Prior.

5. Pursuit of something as desirable.

Yet this mad chase of fame, by few purfu'd,
Has drawn destruction on the multitude. Dryden's Juvenal.

6. The game hunted.

She, seeing the towering of her pursued chase, went circling about, rising so with the less sense of rising. Sidney.

Hold, Warwick! seek thee out some other chase,
For I myself must hunt this deer to death. Shakef.

Honour's the noblest chase; pursue that game,
And recompence the loss of love with fame. Granville.

7. Open ground stored with such beasts as are hunted.

A receptacle for deer and game, of a middle nature between a forest and a park; being commonly less than a forest, and not endued with so many liberties; and yet of a larger compass, and stored with greater diversity of game than a park.

A chase differs from a forest in this, because it may be in the hands of a subject, which a forest, in its proper nature, cannot: and from a park, in that it is not inclosed, and hath not only a larger compass, and more store of game, but likewise more keepers and overseers. Cowel.

He and his lady both are at the lodge,
Upon the northside of this pleasant chase. Shakef.

8. The CHASE of a gun, is the whole bore or length of a piece, taken within side. Chambers.

CHASE-GUN, n. f. [from chase and gun.] Guns in the forepart of the ship, fired upon those that are pursued.

Mean time the Belgians tack upon our rear,
And raking chase-guns through our stern they fend. Dryden.

CHASER, n. f. [from chase.]

1. Hunter; pursuer; driver.

Then began
A stop i' th' chaser, a retire; anon
A rout, confusion thick.

So fast he flies, that his reviewing eye
Has lost the chasers, and his ear the cry. De la Harpe.

Stretch'd on the lawn, his second hope survey,
At once the chaser, and at once the prey,
Lo Rufus tugging at the deadly dart,
Bleeds in the forest like a wounded hart! Pope.

2. An enchafer.

CHASM, n. f. [χασμα.]

1. A breach unclosed; a cleft; a gap; an opening.

In all that visible corporeal world, we see no
chasms or gaps. Locke.

The

C H A

The water of this orb communicates with that of the ocean, by means of certain hiatuses or chasms passing betwixt it and the bottom of the ocean. Woodward.

The ground adust her riv'n mouth disparts,
Horrible chasm! profound. Philips.

2. A place unfilled; a vacuity.
Some lazy ages, lost in ease,
No action leave to busy chronicles;
Such, whose supine felicity but makes
In story chasm, in epochas mistakes. Dryden.

CHASSE-LEADS. n. f. [Fr.] A fort of grape.

CHASTE. adj. [chaste, Fr. castus, Lat.]

1. Pure from all commerce of sexes; as, a chaste virgin.

Diana chaste, and Hebe fair. Prior.

2. With respect to language; pure; uncorrupt; not mixed with barbarous phrases.

3. Free from obscenity.

Among words which signify the same principal ideas, some are clean and decent, others unclean; some chaste, others obscene. Watts's Logick.

4. True to the marriage bed.

Love your children, be discreet, chaste, keepers at home. Titus.

CHASTE-TREE. n. f. [vitex, Lat.]

This tree will grow to be eight or ten feet high, and produce spikes of flowers at the extremity of every strong shoot in autumn. Miller.

To CHASTEN. v. a. [chastier, Fr. castigo, Lat.]

To correct; to punish; to mortify.

Chasten thy son while there is hope, and let not thy foul spare for his crying. Proverbs.

I follow thee, safe guide! the path
Thou lead'st me; and to the hand of Heav'n submit, However chast'ning. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Some feel the rod,
And own, like us, the father's chast'ning hand. Rowe.

From our lost pursuit she wills to hide
Her close decrees, and chasten human pride. Prior.

To CHASTISE. v. a. [castigo, Lat. anciently accented on the first syllable, now on the last.]

1. To punish; to correct by punishment; to afflict for faults.

My breast I'll burst with straining of my courage,
But I will chastise this high-minded strumpet. Shakespeare.

I am glad to see the vanity or envy of the canting chymists thus discovered and chastised. Boyle.

Seldom is the world affrighted or chastised with signs or prodigies, earthquakes or inundations, famines or plagues. Grew's Cosmologia Sacra.

Like you, commission'd to chastise and bless,
He must avenge the world, and give it peace. Prior.

2. To reduce to order, or obedience; to repress; to restrain; to awe.

Hie thee hither,
That I may pour my spirits in thine ear,
And chastise, with the valour of my tongue,
All that impedes thee. Shakespeare.

Know, Sir, that I
Will not wait pinion'd at your master's court,
Nor once be chastis'd with the sober eye
Of dull Octavia. Shakespeare.

The gay social sense
By decency chastis'd. Thomson.

CHASTISEMENT. n. f. [chastisement, Fr.] Correction; punishment; commonly, though not always, used of domestic or parental punishment.

Shall I so much dishonour my fair stars,
On equal terms to give him chastisement? Shakespeare.

He held the chastisement of one which molested the fee of Rome, pleasing to God. Raie's Essays.

For seven years what can a child be guilty of, but lying, or ill-natur'd tricks; the repeated commission of which shall bring him to the chastisement of the rod. Locke.

He receives a fit of sickness as the kind of chastisement and discipline of his heavenly Father, to wean his affections from the world. Bentley.

CHASTITY. n. f. [castitas, Lat.]

1. Purity of the body.

Who can be bound by any solemn vow,
To force a spotless virgin's chastity? Shakespeare.

Chastity is either abstinence or continence: abstinence is that of virgins or widows; continence of married persons: chaste marriages are honourable and pleasing to God. Taylor.

Ev'n here where frozen chastity retires,
Love finds an altar for forbidden fires. Pope.

2. Freedom from obscenity.

There is not chastity enough in language,
Without offence to utter them. Shakespeare. Much Ado.

3. Freedom from bad mixture of any kind; purity of language, opposed to barbarisms.

CHASTISER. n. f. [from chastise.] The person that chastises; a punisher; a corrector.

CHASTLY. adv. [from chaste.] Without incontinence; purely; without contamination.

You should not pass here: no, though it were as virtuous to lie as to live chastely. Shakespeare.

Make first a song of joy and love,
Which chastely flame in royal eyes. Wotton.

Succession of long descent,
Which chastely in the channels ran,
And from our demi gods began. Dryden.

CHASTNESS. n. f. [from chaste.] Chastity; purity.

To CHAT. v. n. [from caqueter, Fr. Skinner; perhaps from achat, purchase or cheapening, on account of the prate naturally produced in a bargain; or only, as it is most likely, contracted from chatter.] To prate; to talk idly; to prattle; to cackle; to chatter; to converse at ease.

Thus chatten the people in their steads,
Ylike as a monster of many heads. Spenser.

Because that I familiarly sometimes,
Do use you for my food, and chat with you,
Your fauciness will jest upon my love. Shakespeare.

The shepherds on the lawn,
Sat simply chatting in a rustick row. Milton.

With much good-will the motion was embrac'd,
To chat a while on their adventures pass'd. Dry.

To CHAT. v. a. To talk of. Not in use, unless ludicrously.

All tongues speak of him, and the bleared fights
Are spectacled to see him. Your prattling nurse
Into a rapture lets her baby cry,
While the chats him. Shakespeare.

CHAT. n. f. [from the verb.] Idle talk; prate; slight or negligent tattle.

Lords that can prate
As amply and unnecessarily,
As this Gonzalo, I myself would make
A clough of as deep chat. Shakespeare.

The time between before the fire they sat,
And shorten'd the delay by pleasing chat. Dryden.

The least is good, far greater than the tickling
Of his palate with a glass of wine, or the idle chat of a foaking club. Locke.

Snuff, or the fan, supplies each pause of chat,
With singing, laughing, ogling, and all that. Pope.

CHAT. n. f. The keys of trees are called chats; as, ash chats.

CHATELLANY. n. f. [châtelainie, Fr.] The district under the dominion of a castle.

Here are about twenty towns and forts of great importance, with their chattelannies and dependencies. Dryden.

CHATELLE. n. f. [See CATTLE.] Any moveable possession: a term now scarce used but in forms of law.

Nay, look not big, nor stamp, nor stare, nor fret;
I will be master of what is mine own;
She is my goods, my chattels. Shakespeare.

Honour's a lease for lives to come,
And cannot be extended from
The legal tenant: 'tis a chattel
Not to be forfeited in battle. Hudibras.

To CHATTER. v. n. [caqueter, Fr.]

1. To make a noise as a pie, or other unharmonious bird.

Nightingales seldom sing, the pie still chattereth. Sidney.

So doth the cuckoo, when the mavis sings,
Begin his wile's note apace to chatter. Spenser.

There was a crow sat chattering upon the back of a sheep; Well, sirrah, says the sheep, you durst not have done this to a dog. L'Estrange.

Your birds of knowledge, that in dusky air Chatter futurity. Dryden.

2. To make a noise by collision of the teeth.

Stood Theodore surpriz'd in deadly fright,
With chattering teeth, and bristling hair upright. Dryden.

Dip but your toes into cold water,
Their correspondent teeth will chatter. Prior.

3. To talk idly or carelessly.

Suffer no hour to pass away in a lazy idleness,
An impertinent chattering, or useless trifles. Watts's Logick.

CHATTER. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Noise like that of a pie or monkey.

The mimick ape began his chatter,
How evil tongues his life bespatter. Swift.

2. Idle prate.

CHATTERER. n. f. [from chatter.] An idle talker; a prattler.

CHATWOOD. n. f. Little sticks; fuel.

CHAU MONTE' LLE. n. f. [Fr.] a sort of pear.

To CHAW. v. a. [kaewen, Germ.] To champ between the teeth; to masticate; to chew.

I home returning, fraught with foul despight,
And chawing vengeance all the way I went. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

They come to us, but us love draws;
He swallows us, and never chaws;
He is the tyrant pike, and we the fry. Donne.

Whether he found any use of chawing little sponges, dipt in oil, in his mouth, when he was perfectly under water, and at a distance from his engine. Boyle.

The man who laugh but once to see an ass
Mumbling to make the cross-grain'd thistles pass, Might laugh again, to see a jury chaw
The prickles of unpalatable law. Dryden.

CHAW. n. f. [from the verb.] The chap; the upper or under part of the beast's mouth.

I will turn thee back, and put hooks into thy chaws, and will bring thee forth and all thine army. Exekiel.

CHAW'DRON. n. f. Entrails.

Add thereto a tyger's chaw'dron,
For the ingredients of our cauldron. Shakespeare.

CHEAP. adj. [ceapan, Sax. koopen, Dutch, to buy.]

1. To be had at a low rate; purchased for a small price.

Where there are a great many sellers to a few buyers, there the thing to be sold will be cheap. On the other side, raise up a great many buyers for a few sellers, and the same thing will immediately turn dear. Locke.

2. Of small value; easy to be had; not respected.

The goodness, that is cheap in beauty, makes beauty brief in goodness. Shakespeare.

Had I so lavish of my presence been,
So common hackney'd in the eyes of merr,
So stale and cheap to vulgar company. Shakespeare.

He that is too much in any thing, so that he giveth another occasion of society, maketh himself cheap. Bacon.

May your sick fame still languish till it die,
And you grow cheap in every subject's eye. Dryden.

The titles of distinction, which belong to us, are turned into terms of derision, and every way is taken, by profane men, towards rendering us cheap and contemptible. Atterbury.

CHEAP. n. f. [chepe is an old word for market; whence East-cheap, Cheshide.] Market; purchase; bargain: as good cheap; [a bon marché, Fr.]

The same wine which we pay so dear for now-a-days, in that good world was very good cheap. Sidney.

It is many a man's case to tire himself out with hunting after that abroad, which he carries about him all the while, and may have it better cheap at home. L'Estrange.

Some

CHE

Some few insulting cowards, who love to vapour good cheap, may trample on those who give least resistance. Decay of Piety.

To CHEAPEN. v. a. [ceapan, Sax. to buy.]

1. To attempt to purchase; to bid for any thing; to ask the price of any commodity.

Rich she shall be, that's certain; wife, or I'll none; virtuous, or I'll never cheapen her. Shaksp.
The first he cheapen'd was a Jupiter, which would have come at a very easy rate. L'Estrange.

She slept sometimes to Mrs. Thody's,

To cheapen tea. Prior.

To shops in crouds the daggled females fly,

Pretend to cheapen goods, but nothing buy. Swift.

2. To lessen value.

My hopes pursue a brighter diadem,

Can any brighter than the Roman be?

I find my proffer'd love has cheapen'd me. Dry.

CHEAPLY. adv. [from cheap.] At a small price; at a low rate.

By these I see

So great a day as this is cheaply bought. Shaksp.

Blood, rapines, massacres, were cheaply bought,

So mighty recompence your beauty brought. Dry.

CHEAPNESS. n. f. [from cheap.] Lowness of price.

Ancient statutes incite merchant-strangers to bring in commodities; having for end cheapness. Bacon.

The discredit which is grown upon Ireland, has been the great discouragement to other nations to transplant themselves hither, and prevailed farther than all the invitations which the cheapness and plenty of the country has made them. Temple.

CHEAR. See CHEER.

To CHEAT. v. a. [of uncertain derivation;
probably from cheater, Fr. to purchase, alluding to the tricks used in making bargains. See the noun.]

1. To defraud; to impose upon; to trick. It is used commonly of low cunning.

It is a dangerous commerce, where an honest man is sure at first of being cheated; and he recovers not his losses, but by learning to cheat others. Dryden.

There are people who find that the most effectual way to cheat the people, is always to pretend to infallible cures. Tillotson.

2. It has of before the thing taken away by fraud.

I that am curtail'd of this fair proportion,

Cheated of feature by dissembling nature,

Deform'd, unfinish'd. Shaksp.

CHEAT. n. f. [from the verb. Some think abbreviated from cheat, because many fraudulent measures being taken by the lords of manours in procuring cheats, cheat the abridgment was brought to convey a bad meaning.]

1. A fraud; a trick; an imposture.

The pretence of publick good is a cheat that will ever pass, though so abused by ill men, that I wonder the good do not grow ashamed to use it.
Temple.

Emp'rick politicians use deceit,

Hide what they give, and cure but by a cheat. Dryden.

When I consider life, 'tis all a cheat;

Yet, fool'd with hope, men favour the deceit.

Trust on, and think to-morrow will repay;

To-morrow's falser than the former day;

Lyes worse; and while it says, we shall be blest,

With some new joys cuts off what we possess.

2. A person guilty of fraud.

Diffimulation can be no further useful than it is concealed; for as much as no man will trust a known cheat. South.

Like that notorious cheat, vast fums I give,

Only that you may keep me while I live. Dryden.

CHEATER. n. f. [from cheat.] One that practises fraud.

I will be cheater to them both, and they shall be exchequers to me. [It is here for cheater.] Shaksp.

They say this town is full of couzenage,

As nimble jugglers that deceive the eye;

CHE

Disguis'd cheaters, prating mountebanks,
And many such like libertines of sin. Shaksp.

He is no swaggerer, hostess; a tame cheater I faith—Cheater call you him? I will bar no honest man my house, nor no cheater. Shaksp.

All sorts of injurious persons, the sacrilegious, the detainers of tithes, cheaters of men's inheri-tances, false witnesses and accusers.

Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

To CHECK. v. a. [from the French, chequer, chefs; from whence we use at that game, the term checkmate, when we stop our adversary from carrying on his play any farther.]

1. To repress; to curb.

Refrave thy state; with better judgment check
This hideous rashness. Shaksp.

Fames may be sown and raised, they may be spread and multiplied, they may be checked and laid dead. Bacon.

I hate when vice can bolt her arguments,

And virtue has no tongue to check her pride. Milton.

He who sat at a table, richly and deliciously furnished, but with a sword hanging over his head by one single thread or hair, surely had enough to check his appetite. South.

2. To reprove; to chide.

Richard, with his eye brimful of tears,
Then check'd and rated by Northumberland,
Did speak these words, now prov'd a prophecy. Shaksp.

His fault is much, and the good king his master
Will check him for't. Shaksp.

3. To compare a bank note or other bill, with the correspondent paper.

4. To controul by a counter reckoning.

To CHECK. v. n.

1. To stop; to make a stop: with at.

The quality of the persons, and the time;

And, like the haggard, check at every feather

That comes before his eye. Shaksp.

The mind, once jaded by an attempt above its power, either is disabled for the future, or else checks at any vigorous undertaking ever after. Locke.

2. To clash; to interfere.

If love check with business, it troubleth men's fortunes. Bacon.

3. To strike with repression.

I'll avoid his presence;

It checks too strong upon me. Dryden.

CHECK. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Repression; stop; rebuff; sudden restraint.

Rebellion in this land shall lose his sway,

Meeting the check of such another day. Shaksp.

We see also, that kings that have been fortunate conquerors in their first years, must have some check or arrest in their fortunes. Bacon's Essays.

God hath of late years manifested himself in a very dreadful manner, as if it were on purpose to give a check to this insolent impiety. Tillotson.

It was this viceroy's zeal, which gave a remarkable check to the first progress of christianity.

God put it into the heart of one of our princes, to give a check to that sacrilege, which had been but too much winked at. Atterbury.

The great struggle with passions is in the first check. Rogers.

2. Restraint; curb; government; continued restraint.

They who come to maintain their own breach of faith, the check of their consciences much break-eth their spirit. Hayward.

The impetuosity of the new officer's nature needed some restraint and check, for some time, to his immoderate pretences and appetite of power. Clarendon.

Some free from rhyme or reason, rule or check,

Break Priscian's head, and Pegasus's neck. Pope.

While such men are in trust, who have no check from within, nor any views but towards their interest. Swift.

3. A reproof; a flight.

CHE

Oh! this life

Is nobler than attending for a check. Shaksp.

I do know, the state,

However this may gall him with some check,

Cannot with safety cast him. Shaksp.

4. A dislike; a sudden disgust; something that stops the progress.

Say I should wed her, would not my wife

subjects

Take check, and think it strange? perhaps revolt? Dryden.

5. In falconry, when a hawk forsakes her proper game to follow rooks, pies, or other birds that cross her flight. Chambers.

A young woman is a hawk upon her wings;

and if she be handsome, she is the more subject to go out on check. Suckling.

When whistled from the fist,

Some falcon stoops at what her eye design'd,

And with her eagerness, the quarry mis'd,

Streight flies at check, and clips it down the wind. Dryden.

6. The person checking; the cause of restraint;

a stop.

He was unhappily too much used as a check upon the lord Coventry. Clarendon.

A satirical poet is the check of the laymen on bad priests. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

7. Any stop or interruption.

The letters have the natural production by feveral checks or stops, or, as they are usually called, articulations of the breath or voice. Holder's Elements of Speech.

8. The correspondent cipher of a bank-bill.

9. A term used in the game of chess, when one party obliges the other either to move or guard his king.

10. Clerk of the CHECK, in the king's household, has the check and controulment of the yeomen of the guard, and all the officers belonging to the royal family.

11. Clerk of the CHECK, in the king's navy at Plymouth, is also the name of an officer invested with like powers. Chambers.

To CHECKER. v. a. [from chequer, chess, Fr.]

To CHECKER. v. n. To variegate or diversify, in the manner of a chess-board, with alternate colours, or with darker and brighter parts.

The grey-eyed morn smiles on the frowning night,

Check'ring the eastern clouds with streaks of light. Shaksp.

The green leaves quiver with the cooling wind,

And make a chequer'd shadow on the ground. Shaksp.

As the snake roll'd in the flow'ry bank,

With shining checker'd flough doth sting a child,

That for the beauty thinks it excellent. Shaksp.

The wealthy spring yet never bore

That sweet, nor dainty flower,

That damask'd not the checker'd floor

Of Cynthia's summer bower. Drayton.

Many a youth and many a maid,

Dancing in the checker'd shade. Milton.

In the chess-board, the use of each chess-man is determined only within that chequered piece of wood. Locke.

In our present condition, which is a middle state, our minds are, as it were, chequered with truth and falsehood. Addison.

The ocean intermixing with the land, so as to checker it into earth and water. Woodward's Natural History.

Here waving groves a checker'd scene display,

And part admit, and part exclude the day. Pope.

I have not that alacrity of spirit,
Nor cheer of mind, that I was wont to have. Shakespeare.

4. Air of the countenance.
Right faithful true he was in deed and word,
But of his cheer did seem too solemn sad,
Nothing did he dread, but ever was ydrad. Spenser.
Which publick death, receiv'd with such a cheer,
As not a sigh, a look, a shrink bewrays
The least felt touch of a degenerate fear,
Gave life to envy, to his courage praise. Daniel.
He ended; and his words their drooping cheer
Enlighten'd, and their languish'd hope reviv'd. Milton.

At length appear
Her grizzly brethren stretch'd upon the bier:
Pale at the sudden sight, she chang'd her cheer. Dryden.

CHE'RT. n. f. [from quartz, Germ.] A kind of flint.

Flint is most commonly found in form of nodules; but 'tis sometimes found in thin strata, when 'tis called chert. Woodward.

CHE'RUB. n. f. [כרוב plur. כרובים] It is sometimes written in the plural, improperly, cherubims. A celestial spirit, which, in the hierarchy, is placed next in order to the seraphim. All the several descriptions which the scripture gives us of cherubim, differ from one another; as they are described in the shapes of men, eagles, oxen, lions, and in a composition of all these figures put together. The hieroglyphical representations in the embroidery upon the curtains of the Tabernacle, were called by Moses, Exod. xxvi. 1. cherubim of cunning work. Calm.

The roof o' th' chamber With gold cherubims is fretted. Shakespeare.

Heaven's cherubin hors'd, Upon the sightless couriers of the air, Shall blow the horrid deed in every eye, That tears shall drown the wind. Shakespeare.

Some cherub finishes what you begun, And to a miracle improves a tune. Prior.

CHE'RUBICK. adj. [from cherub.] Angelick; relating to the cherubim.

Thy words Attentive, and with more delighted ear,

Divine instructor! I have heard, than when Cherubick songs by night from neighb'ring hills

Aerial music send. Milton's Paradise Lost.

And on the east side of the garden place, Cherubick watch. Milton's Paradise Lost.

CHE'RUBIN. adj. [from cherub.] Angelical.

CHE'STNUT. } n. f. [castaigne, Fr. casta-

CHE'STNUT-TREE. } nut, Lat.]

1. The tree hath katkins, which are placed at remote distances from the fruit, on the same tree.

The outer coat of the fruit is very rough, and has two or three nuts included in each husk or covering.

This tree was formerly in greater plenty, as may be proved by the old buildings in London, which were, for the most part, of this timber;

which is equal in value to the best oak, and, for many purposes, far exceeds it, particularly for making vessels for liquors; it having a property, when once thoroughly seasoned, to maintain its bulk constantly, and is not subject to shrink or swell, like other timber. Miller.

C H E

2. The fruit of the chestnut tree. A woman's tongue,

That gives not half so great a blow to th' ear, As will a chestnut in a farmer's fire. Shakespeare.

October has a basket of services, medlars and chestnuts, and fruits that ripen at the latter time. Peacocks on Drawing.

3. The name of a brown colour. His hair is of a good colour.

An excellent colour: your chestnut was ever the only colour. Shakespeare.

Merab's long hair was glossy chestnut brown. Cowley.

CHE'STON. n. f. A species of plum.

CHEVALIER. n. f. [chevalier, Fr.] A knight; a gallant strong man.

Renowned Talbot doth expect my aid; And I am low'd by a traitor villain,

And cannot help the noble chevalier. Shakespeare.

CHEVALUX de Frise. n. f. [Fr. The singular Cheval de Frise is seldom used.] The Friesland horse, which is a piece of timber, larger or smaller, and traversed with wooden spikes, pointed with iron, five or six feet long; used in defending a passage, stopping a breach, or making a retrenchment to stop the cavalry. It is also called a turnpike, or tourniquet. Chambers.

Fortune, the foe of famous chevisance, Seldom, said Guyon, yields to virtue aid. Spenser.

CHE'VRON. n. f. [French.] One of the honourable ordinaries in heraldry. It represents two rafters of a house, set up as they ought to stand. Harris.

To CHEW. v. a. [ceopyan, Sax. karwen, Dutch. It is very frequently pronounced chew, and perhaps properly.]

1. To grind with the teeth; to masticate.

If little faults, proceeding on dis temper, Shall not be wink'd at, how shall we stretch our eye,

When capital crimes, chew'd, swallow'd, and digested, Appear before us? Shakespeare.

Pacing through the forest, Chewing the food of sweet and bitter fancy. Shakespeare.

This pious cheat, that never suck'd the blood, Nor chew'd the flesh of lambs. Dryden's Fables.

The vales Descending gently, where the lowing herd

Chews verd'rous pasture. Philips.

By chewing, solid aliment is divided into small parts: in a human body, there is no other instrument to perform this action but the teeth. By the action of chewing, the spittle and mucus are squeezed from the glands, and mixed with the aliment; which action, if it be long continued, will turn the aliment into a sort of chyle. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. To meditate; or ruminate in the thoughts.

While the fierce monk does at his trial stand, He chews revenge, abjuring his offence:

Guile in his tongue, and murder in his hand, He stabs his judge, to prove his innocence. Prior.

3. To taste without swallowing.

Heaven's in my mouth, As if I did but only chew its name. Shakespeare.

Some books are to be tasted, others to be swallowed, and some few to be read only in parts; others to be read, but not curiously; and some few to be read wholly, with attention. Bacon.

To CHEW. v. n. To champ upon; to ruminate.

I will with patience hear, and find a time;
Till then, my noble friend, chew upon this. Shaksp.
Inculcate the doctrine of disobedience, and then leave the multitude to chew upon't. L'Estrange.

And blunder on in business to the last. Pope.
CHICA'NE. n. f. [chicane, Fr. derived by Me- nage from the Spanish word chico, little.]
1. The art of protracting a contest by petty objection and artifice.

The general part of the civil law concerns not the chicane of private cases, but the affairs and intercourse of civilized nations, grounded upon the principles of reason. Locke.

His attornies have hardly one trick left; they are at an end of all their chicanes.

2. Artifice in general. This sense is only in familiar language.

Unwilling then in arms to meet,
He strove to lengthen the campaign,
And save his forces by chicanes. Prior.

To CHICA'NE. v. n. [chicaner, Fr.] To prolong a contest by tricks.

CHICA'NER. n. f. [chicaner, Fr.] A petty sophist; a trifling disputant; a wrangler.

This is the way to distinguish the two most different things I know, a logical chicaner from a man of reason. Locke.

CHICA'NERY. n. f. [chicanerie, Fr.] Sophistry;
mean arts of wrangle.

His anger caused him to destroy the greatest part of these reports; and only to preserve such as discovered most of the chicanery and futility of the practice. Arbutnot.

CHICHES. n. f. See CHICKPEAS.

CHICHLING VETCH. n. f. [latyrus, Lat.] In Germany they are cultivated, and eaten as peas, though neither so tender nor well tasted. Miller.

CHICKEN. n. f. } [chicken is, I believe, the old plural of chick, though now used as a singular noun.]

1. The young of a bird, particularly of a hen, or small bird.

All my pretty ones!

What, all my pretty chickens, and their dam,
At one fell swoop! Shaksp.

For when the shell is broke, out comes a chick.
Davies.

While it is a chick, and hath no spurs, nor cannot hurt, nor hath seen the motion, yet he readily

Even since she was a fe'en-night old, they say,
Was chaste and humble to her dying day;
Nor chick nor hen, was known to disobey.
Dryden's Fables.

Having the notion that one laid the egg out of which the other was hatched, I have a clear idea of the relation of dam and chick. Locke.

On rainy days alone I dine,
Upon a chick and pint of wine:
On rainy days I dine alone,
And pick my chicken to the bone. Swift.

2. A word of tenderness.

My Ariel, chick,
This is thy charge. Shaksp.

3. A term for a young girl.
Then, Chloe, still go on to prate
Of thirty-six and thirty-eight;
Pursue your trade of scandal-picking,
Your hints, that Stella is no chicken. Swift.

CHICKENHEARTED. adj. [from chicken and heart.] Cowardly; timorous; fearful.

Now we set up for tilting in the pit,
Where 'tis agreed by bullies, chickenhearted,
To fright the ladies first and, then be parted.
Prologue to Spanish Friar.

The CHICKENPOX. n. f. An exanthematous distemper, so called from its being of no very great danger.

CHICKLING. n. f. [from chick.] A small chicken.

of degenerate pea. Miller.

CHICKWEED. n. f. [from chick and weed.] The name of a plant.

Green mint, or chickweed, are of good use, in all the hard swellings of the breast, occasioned by milk. Wise.

To CHIDE. v. a. peter. chid or chode, part. chid or chidd.n. [citan, Sax.]

1. To reprove; to check; to correct with words; applied to persons.

Chide him for faults, and do it reverently,
When you perceive his blood inclin'd to mirth.
Shaksp.

And fly like chidden Mercury from Jove. Shaksp.

Those, that do teach your babes,
Do it with gentle means, and easy talks;
He might have chid me so: for, in good faith,
I am a child to chiding. Shaksp.

Scylla wept,
And chid her barking waves into attention.
Milton.

Above the waves as Neptune shew'd his face,
To chide the winds, and fave the Trojan race.
Waller.

You look as if yon stern philosopher
Had just now chid you. Addison.

If any woman of better fashion in the parish happened to be absent from church, they were sure of a visit from him, to chide and to dine with her. Swift.

2. To drive with reproof.

Margaret my queen, and Clifford too,
Have chid me from the battle. Shaksp.

3. To blame; to reproach; applied to things.

Winds murmur'd through the leaves your long delay,
And fountains o'er the pebbles, chid your stay.
Dryden.

I chid the folly of my thoughtless haste;
For, the work perfected, the joy was past. Prior.

To CHIDE. v. n.

1. To clamour; to scold.

What had he to do to chide at me? Shaksp.

Next morn, betimes, the bride was missing:
The mother scream'd, the father chid,
Where can this idle wench be hid? Swift.

2. To quarrel with.

The business of the state does him offence,
And he does chide with you. Shaksp.

3. To make a noise.

My duty,
As doth a rock against the chiding flood,
Should the approach of this wild river break,
And stand unshaken yours. Shaksp.

CHIDDER. n. f. [from chide.] A rebuker; a re-prover.

Not her that chides, sir, at any hand, I pray.—
I love no chiders, sir. Shaksp.

CHIEF. adj. [chief, Fr.]

1. Principal; most eminent; above the rest in any respect.

These were the chief of the officers that were over Solomon's works. 1 Kings.

The hand of the princes and rulers hath been chief in this trespass. Esra.

Your country, chief in arms, abroad defend;
At home, with morals, arts, and laws amend. Pope.

2. Eminent; extraordinary.

A froward man soweth strife, and a whisperer

3. Capital; of the first order; that to which other parts are inferior, or subordinate.

I came to have a good general view of the apostle's main purpose in writing the epistle, and the chief branches of his discourse wherein he prosecuted it. Locke.

4. It is used by some writers with a superlative termination; but, I think, improperly: the comparative chiefier is never found.

We beseech you, bend you to remain
Here in the cheer and comfort of our eye,
Our chiefest courtier, cousin, and our son. Shaksp.

Doeg an Edomite, the chiefest of the herdmen.
1 Samuel.

He sometimes denied admission to the chiefest officers of the army. Clarendon.

CHIEF. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. A military commander; a leader of armies;
a captain.

Is pain to them

Left pain, lefts to be fled? or thou than they Lefts hardy to enure? courageous chief!

The first in flight from pain. Milt. Par. Lost.

After or before were never known
Such chiefs; as each an army seem'd alone. Dryden.

A wit's a feather, and a chief a rod;
An honest man's the noblest work of God. Pope.

A prudent chief not always must display
His pow'rs in equal ranks, and fair array;
But with th' occasion and the place comply,
Conceal his force, nay seem sometimes to fly. Pope.

2. In CHIEF, in law. In capite, by capital service.

All fums demandable, either for licence of alienation to be made of lands holden in chief, or for the pardon of any such alienation already made without licence, have been stayed in the way to the hanaper. Bacon.

I shall be proud to hold my dependance on you in chief, as I do part of my small fortune in Wiltshire. Dryden.

3. In Spenser it seems to signify somewhat like achievement; a mark of distinction.

Where be the nosegays that the dight for thee?
The coloured shaplets wrought with a chief,
The knottish rush-rings, and gilt rosemary. Spens.

4. In heraldry.

The chief is so called of the French word chef, the head or upper part: this possesses the upper third part of the escutcheon. Peacocks on Drawing.

CHIEFDOM. n. f. [from chief.] Sovereignty.
Not in use.

Zephyrus being in love with Chloris, and coveting her to wife, gave her for a dowry the chief- dom and sovereignty of all flowers and green herbs.
Spens. Kal. Gloss.

CHIEFLESS. adj. [from chief.] Wanting a head;
being without a leader.

And chiefless armies doz'd out the campaign,
And navies yawn'd for orders on the main. Pope.

CHIEFLY. adv. [from chief.] Principally; eminently; more than common.

Any man who will consider the nature of an epic poem, what action it describes, and what persons they are chiefly whom it informs, will find it a work full of difficulty. Dryden.

Those parts of the kingdom, where the number and estates of the dissenters chiefly lay. Swift.

CHIEFRIE. n. f. [from chief.] A small rent paid to the lord Paramount.

They shall be well able to live upon those lands, to yield her majesty reasonable chiefries, and also give a competent maintenance unto the garrisons.
Spenser's Ireland.

Would the reserved rent at this day be any more than a small chiefrie? Swift.

CHIEFTAIN. n. f. [from chief, captain.]

1. A leader; a commander.

That forc'd their chieftain, for his safety's sake,
(Their chieftain Humber named was aright)
Unto the mighty stream him to betake,
Where he an end of battle and of life did make.
Fairy Queen.

2. The head of a clan.

It broke, and absolutely subdued all the lords and chieftains of the Irishry. Davies on Ireland.

CHIEFVANCE. n. f. [probably from advance,
Fr. purchase.] Traffick, in which money is extorted; as discount. Now obsolete.

There were good laws against usury, the bastard use of money; and against unlawful chiefvances and exchanges, which is bastard usury. Bacon.

CHILBLAIN. n. f. [from chill, cold, and blain;
so that Temple seems mistaken in his etymology, or has written it wrong to serve a purpose.] Sores made by frost.

I remembered the cure of chilblains when I was a boy (which may be called the children's gout), by burning at the fire. Temple.

CHILD. n. f. in the plural CHILDREN. [child, Saxon.]

1. An infant, or very young person.

In age, to wish for youth is full as vain.
As for a youth to turn a child again. Denham.
We should no more be kinder to one child than to another, than we are tender of one eye more than of the other. L'Estrange.

The young lad must not be ventured abroad at eight or ten, for fear of what may happen to the tender child; though he then runs ten times less risk than at sixteen. Locke.

The stroke of death is nothing: children endure it, and the greatest cowards find it no pain. Waller.

2. One in the line of filiation, opposed to the parent.

Where children have been exposed, or taken away young, and afterwards have approached to their parents' presence, the parents, though they have not known them, have had a secret joy, or other alteration thereupon. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

I shall see
The winged vengeance overtake such children. Shakespeare.

So unexhausted her perfections were,
That for more children, she had more to spare. Dryden.

He in a fruitful wife's embraces old,
A long increase of children's children told. Addison.

3. The descendants of a man, how remote soever, are called children; as the children of Edom, the children of Israel.

4. In the language of scripture.

One weak in knowledge. Isaiah. i. Cor.
Such as are young in grace. i. John.

Such as are humble and docile. Matthew.

The children of light, the children of darkness; who follow light, who remain in darkness.

The elect, the blessed, are also called the children of God.

How is he numbered among the children of God, and his lot is among the saints! Wisdom.

In the New Testament, believers are commonly called children of God.

Ye are all the children of God, by faith in Jesus Christ. Gal. iii. 26.

5. A girl child. Not in use.

Mercy on's, a bearne, a very pretty bearne!
A boy, or child, I wonder! Shakespeare.

6. Any thing, the product or effect of another.

Macduff, this noble passion,
Child of integrity, hath from my soul
Wip'd the black scruples. Shakespeare.

7. To be with child. To be pregnant.

If it must stand still, let wives with child
Pray that their burthen may not fall this day,
Lest that their hopes prodigiously be crost. Shakespeare.

To CHILD. v. n. [from the noun.] To bring children.

The spring, the summer,
The chilling autumn, angry winter change
Their wonted liveries. Shakespeare.

As to childing women, young vigorous people, after irregularities of diet, in such it begins with hemorrhages. Arbutnot.

CHILD BEARING. participial substantive. [from child and bear.] The act of bearing children.

To thee,
Pains only in childbearing were tordred,
And, in bringing forth, soon recompens'd with joy.

Fruit of thy womb. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The timorous and irresolute Sylvia has demurred till she is past childbearing. Addison.

CHILDLED. n. f. [from child and led.] The state of a woman bringing a child, or being in labour.

The funerals of prince Arthur, and of queen Elizabeth, who died in childled in the Tower. Bacon.

Pure, as when wash'd from spot of childbed stain. Paradise Regained.

Yet these, tho' poor, the pain of childbed bear. Dryden.

Let no one be actually married, till she hath the childbed pillows. Spektor.

Women in childbed are in the case of persons wounded. Arbutnot on Diet.

CHILD BIRTH. n. f. [from child and birth.] Travail; labour; the time of bringing forth; the act of bringing forth.

The mother of Pyrocles, after her childbirth, died. Sidney.

A kernel void of any taste, but not so of virtue, especially for women travelling in childbirth. Carew's Survey.

In the whole sex of women, God hath decreed the sharpest pains of childbirth; to shew, that there is no state exempt from sorrow. Taylor's Holy Living.

He to his wife, before the time assign'd
For childbirth came, thus bluntly spoke his mind. Dryden.

CHILDLED. adj. [from child.] Furnished with a child.

How light and portable my pain seems now,
When that which makes me bend, makes the king bow;

He childed as I father'd. Shakespeare.

CHILDERMAS DAY. [from child and mass.]

The day of the week throughout the year, answering to the day on which the feast of the holy Innocents is solemnized, which weak and superstitious persons think an unlucky day.

To talk of hares, or such uncouth things, proves as ominous to the fisherman, as the beginning of a voyage on the day when childermas day fell, doth to the mariner. Carew.

CHILDHOOD. n. f. [from child, cildhab, Sax.]

1. The state of children; or, the time in which we are children: it includes infancy, but is continued to puberty.

Now I have stain'd the childhood of our joy
With blood remov'd but little from our own. Shakespeare.

The fons of lords and gentlemen should be trained up in learning from their childhoods. Spenser on Ireland.

Seldom have I ceas'd to eye
Thy infancy, thy childhood, and thy youth. Milton.

The same authority that the actions of a man have with us in our childhood, the same, in every period of life, has the practice of all whom we regard as our superiors. Rogers.

2. The time of life between infancy and puberty.

Infancy and childhood demand thin, copious, nourishing aliment. Arbutnot on Aliments.

3. The properties of a child.

Their love in early infancy began,
And rose as childhood ripen'd into man. Dryden.

CHILDISH. adj. [from child.]

1. Having the qualities of a child; trifling; ignorant; simple.

Learning hath its infancy, when it is but beginning and almost childlike: then its youth, when it is luxuriant and juvenile. Bacon's Essay.

2. Becoming only children; trifling; puerile.

Musidorus being elder by three or four years, there was taken away the occasion of childish contentions. Sidney.

The lion's whelps the saw how he did bear,
And lull in rugged arms withouten childish fear. Spenser.

When I was yet a child, no childlike play
To me was pleasing; all my mind was set Serious to learn and know. Paradise Regained.

The fathers looked on the worship of images as the most silly and childlike thing in the world. Stillingfleet.

One that hath newly learn'd to speak and go, Loves childlike plays. Roscommon.

They have spoiled the walls with childish sentences, that consist often in a jingle of words. Addison on Italy.

By conversation the childlike humours of their younger days might be worn out. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

CHILDISHLY. adv. [from childlike.] In a childlike trifling way; like a child.

Together with his fame their infamy was spread, who had so rashly and childishly ejected him. Hooker.

Some men are of excellent judgment in their own professions, but childishly unskilful in any thing besides. Hayward.

CHILDISHNESS. n. f. [from childlike.]

1. Puerility; triflingness.

The actions of childlike, and unfashionable carriage, time and age will of itself be sure to reform. Locke.

Nothing in the world could give a truer idea of the superstition, credulity, and childlike of the Roman catholic religion. Addison on Italy.

2. Harmlessness.

Speak thou, boy;
Perhaps thy childlike will move him more Than can our reason. Shakespeare.

CHILDLESS. adj. [from child.] Without children; without offspring.

As thy sword hath made women childless, so shall thy mother be childless among women. i. Samuel.

A man shall see the noblest works and foundations have proceeded from childless men; which have fought to express the images of their minds, where those of their bodies have failed: so the care of posterity is most in them that have no posterity. Bacon's Essays.

Childless thou art, childless remain: so death
Shall be deceiv'd his glut. Milton's Paradise Lost.

She can give the reason why one died childless. Spektor.

CHILDLIKE. adj. [from child and like.] Becoming or befitting a child.

Who can owe no less than childlike obedience to her that hath more than motherly care. Hooker.

I thought the remnant of mine age
Should have been cherish'd by her childlike duty. Shakespeare.

CHILDLIAD. n. f. [from χίλις.] A thousand; a collection or sum containing a thousand.

We make cycles and periods of years; as decades, centuries, chiliads, for the use of computation in history. Holder.

CHILIAEDRON. n. f. [from χίλις.] A figure of a thousand sides.

In a man, who speaks of a chiliadron, or a body of a thousand sides, the idea of the figure may be very confused, though that of the number be very distinct. Locke.

CHILIFACTIVE. adj. [from chile.] That which makes chile.

Whether this be not effected by some way of corrosion, rather than any proper digestion, chilifactive mutation, or alimental conversion. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CHILIFACTORY. adj. [from chile.] That which has the quality of making chile.

We should rather rely upon a chilifactory menstruum, or digestive preparation drawn from species or individuals, whose stomachs peculiarly dissolve lapideous bodies. Brown.

CHILIFICATION. n. f. [from chile.] The act of making chile.

Nor will we affirm that iron is indigested in the stomach of the ostriche; but we suspect this effect to proceed not from any liquid reduction, or tendence to chylification, by the power of natural heat. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CHILL. adj. [cele, Sax.]

1. Cold; that which is cold to the touch.

And all my plants I save from nightly ill,
Of noisome winds, and blasting vapours chill. Milton.

2. Cold; having the sensation of cold; shivering with cold.

My heart, and my chill veins, freeze with despair. Rowe.

3. Dull; not warm; not forward: as, a chill reception.

4. Depressed; dejected; discouraged.

CHILL. n. f. [from the adjective.] Chiliness; cold.

I very well know one to have a sort of chill about his præcordia and head. Derham's Physico-Theology.

To CHILL. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To make cold.

Age has not yet
So shrink my sinews, or so chill'd my veins,
But conscious virtue in my breast remains. Dryden.
Heat burns his rife, frost chills his fettering beams,
And vex the world with opposite extremes. Creech.

Each changing season does its poison bring;
Rheums chill the winter, agues blast the spring. Prior.

Now no more the drum
Provokes to arms; or trumpet's clangor thrills
Affrights the wives, or chills the virgin's blood. Philips.

2. To depreß; to deject; to discourage.
Every thought on God chills the gaiety of his spirits, and awakens terrors, which he cannot bear. Rogers.

3. To blast with cold.
The fruits perish on the ground,
Or soon decay, by snows immoderate chill'd,
By winds are blasted, or by lightning kill'd. Blackmore.

CHILLINESS. n. f. [from chilly.] A sensation of shivering cold.
If the patient survives three days, the acuteness of the pain abates, and a chilliness or shivering affects the body. Arbuthnot.

CHILLY. adj. [from chill.] Somewhat cold.
A chilly sweat bedews

My shudd'ring limbs. Philips.
CHILNESS. n. f. [from chill.] Coldness; want of warmth.

If you come out of the sun suddenly into a shade, there followeth a chillness, or shivering in all the body. Bacon.

This, while he thinks, he lifts aloft his dart,
A gen'rous chillness seizes ev'ry part,
The veins pour back the blood, and fortify the heart. Dryden.

CHIME. n. f. [kime, Dutch.] The end of a barrel or tub.

CHIME. n. f. [The original of this word is doubtful. Junius and Ninshew suppose it corrupted from cimbal; Skinner from gamme, or gamus; Henslow from chiamare, to call, because the chime calls to church. Perhaps it is only softened from chimne, or churne, an old word for the found of many voices, or instruments making a noise together.]

1. The consonant or harmonick found of many correspondent instruments.

Hang our shaggy thighs with bells;
That, as we do strike a tune,
In our dance, shall make a chime. Ben Jonson.

The found
Of instruments, that made melodious chime,
Was heard of harp and organ. Milton's Par. Lost.

Love virtue, she alone is free;
She can teach you how to climb
Higher than the spherie chime. Milton.

2. The correspondence of sound.
Love first invented verse, and form'd the rhyme,
The motion measur'd, harmoniz'd the chime. Dryden.

3. The found of bells, not rung by ropes, but struck with hammers. In this sense it is always used in the plural, chimes.

We have heard the chimes at midnight. Shakespeare.
4. The correspondence of proportion or relation.

The conceptions of things are placed in their several degrees of similitude; as in several proportions, one to another: in which harmonious chimes, the voice of reason is often drowned. Grew's Cosmopol.

To CHIME, v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To found in harmony or consonance.
To make the rough recital aptly chime,
Or bring the sum of Gallia's loss to rhyme,
'Tis mighty hard. Prior.

2. To correspond in relation or proportion.
Father and son, husband and wife, and such other correlative terms, do belong one to another;
and, through custom, do readily chime, and answer
one another, in people's memories. Locke.

3. To agree; to fall in with.

He not only sat quietly and heard his father railed at, but often chimed in with the discourse. Arbuthnot's History of J. Bull.

4. To suit with; to agree.
Any sect, whose reasonings, interpretation, and language, I have been used to, will, of course, make all chime that way; and make another, and perhaps the genuine meaning of the author, seem harsh, strange, and uncouth to me. Locke.

5. To jingle; to clatter.
But with the meaner tribe I'm forc'd to chime,
And, wanting strength to rise, descend to rhyme. Snailb.

To CHIME, v. a.

1. To move, or strike, or cause to found har-monically, or with just consonance.

With lifted arms they order ev'ry blow,
And chime their sounding hammers in a row:
With labour'd anvils Aetna groans below. Dryden's Georgics.

2. To strike a bell with a hammer.
CHIMERA. n. f. [Chimera, Lat.] A vain and wild fancy, as remote from reality as the existence of the poetical chimera, a monster feigned to have the head of a lion, the belly of a goat, and the tail of a dragon.

In short, the force of dreams is of a piece,
Chimeras all; and more absurd, or less. Dryden's Fables.

No body joins the voice of a sheep with the shape of a horse, to be the complex ideas of any real substances, unless he has a mind to fill his head with chimeras, and his discourse with unintelligible words. Locke.

CHIMERICAL. adj. [From chimera.] Imaginary; fanciful; wildly, vainly, or fantasticaly conceived: fantastick.

Notwithstanding the fineness of this allegory may atone for it in some measure, I cannot think that persons of such a chimerical existence are proper actors in an epic poem. Spektor.

CHIMERICALLY. adv. [from chimerical.] Vainly; wildly; fantasticaly.

CHIMINAGE. n. f. [from chimin, an old law word for a road.] A toll for passage through a forest. Cowell.

CHIMNEY. n. f. [cheminée, French.]

1. The passage through which the smoke ascends from the fire in the house.

Chimnies, with scorn, rejecting smoke. Swift.

2. The turret raised above the roof of the house, for conveyance of the smoke.

The night has been unruly: where we lay,
Our chimnies were blown down. Shakespeare.

3. The fireplace.

The chimney
Is south the chamber; and the chimney-piece, Chaste Dian bathing. Shakespeare.

The fire which the Chaldeans worshipped for a god, is crept into every man's chimney. Raleigh's History.

Low offices, which some neighbours hardly think it worth stirring from their chimney sides to obtain. Swift on Sac. Test.

CHIMNEY-CORNER. n. f. [from chimney and corner.] The fireside; the seat on each end of the firegrate; usually noted in proverbial language for being the place of idlers.

Yet some old men

Tell stories of you in their chimney-corner. Denham.

CHIMNEYPIECE. n. f. [from chimney and piece.]
The ornamental piece of wood, or stone, that is set round the fireplace.

Polish and brighten the marble hearths and chimneypieces with a clout dipt in grease. Swift.

CHIMNEYSWEEPER. n. f. [from chimney and sweeper.]

1. One whose trade it is to clean foul chimnies of foot.

To look like her, are chimneysweepers black:
And since her time are colliers counted bright. Shakespeare.

The little chimneysweeper skulks along,
And marks with footy stains the heedless throng. Gay.

Even lying Ned the chimneysweeper of Savoy, and Tom the Portugal dustman, put in their chimns. Arbuthnot.

2. It is used proverbially for one of a mean and vile occupation.

Golden lads and girls, all must,
As chimneysweepers, come to dust. Shakespeare.
CHIN. n. f. [chine, Sax. kin, Germ.] The part of the face beneath the under-lip.

But all the words I could get of her, was wry-ing her waist, and thrusting out her chin. Sidney.

With his Amazonian chin he drove
The bristled lips before him. Shakespeare.

He rais'd his hardy head, which sunk again,
And, sinking on his bosom, knock'd his chin. Dryden.

CHINA. n. f. [from China, the country where it is made.] China ware; porcelain; a species of vessels made in China, dully transparent, partaking of the qualities of earth and glass. They are made by mingling two kinds of earth, of which one easily vitrifies; the other resists a very strong heat: when the vitrifiable earth is melted into glass, they are completely burnt.

Spleen, vapours, or small-pox, above them all,
And mistress of herself, tho' china fall. Pope.

After supper, carry your plate and china together in the same basker. Swift.

CHINA-ORANGE. n. f. [from China and orange.]
The sweet orange; brought originally from China.

Not many years has the China-orange been propagated in Portugal and Spain. Mortimer's Husb.

CHINA-ROOT. n. f. [from China and root.] A medicinal root, brought originally from China.

CHINCUGH. n. f. [perhaps more properly kinough, from kinchin, to pant. Dut. and cough.] A violent and convulsive cough, to which children are subject.

I have observed a chincough, complicated with an intermitting fever. Floyer on the Humors.

CHINE. n. f. [eschine, Fr. schiena, Ital. spina,
Lat. caia, Arn.]

1. The part of the back, in which the spine or backbone is found.

She strake him such a blow upon his chine, that she opened all his body. Sidney.

He presents her with the tusky head
And chine, with rising bristles roughly spread. Dry.

2. A piece of the back of an animal.

Cut out the burly boned clown in chines of beef ere thou sleep. Shakespeare.

He had killed eight fat hogs for this season, and he had dealt about his chines very liberally amongst his neighbours. Spektor.

To CHINE, v. a. [from the noun.] To cut into chines.

He that in his line did chine the long rib'd Apennine. Dryden.

CHINK. n. f. [cman, to gape, Sax.] A small aperture longwise; an opening or gap between the parts of any thing.

Pyramus and Thisby did talk through the chink of a wall. Shakespeare. Midsum. Night Dream.

Plagues also have been raised by anointing the chinks of doors, and the like. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Though birds have no epiglottis, yet they fo contract the chink of their larynx, as to prevent the admission of wet or dry indigested.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Other inventions, false and absurd, that are like so many chinks and holes to discover the rottenness of the whole fabrick. South.

In vain the search'd each cranny of the house,
Each gaping chink, impervious to a mouse. Swift.

To CHINK, v. a. [derived by Skinner from the found.] To shake so as to make a found.

He chink his purse, and takes his feat of state;
With ready quills the dedicators wait. Pope's Dunciad.

To CHINK, v. n. To found by striking each other.

Lord Strutt's money shines as bright, and chinks
as well, as 'quire South's. Arbuth. Hist. J. Bull.

When not a guinea chink'd on Martin's boards,
And Atwill's self was drain'd of all his hoards. Swift.

CHINKY.

CHINKY, adj. [from chink.] Full of holes; gaping; opening into narrow clefts.

But plaister thou the chinky hives with clay.
Dryden's Virgil.

Grimalkin, to domestick vermin sworn

An everlasting foe, with watchful eye

Lies nightly brooding o'er a chinky gap

Protending her fell claws, to thoughtless mice

Sure ruin.
Philips's Poems.

CHINTS, n. f. Cloth of cotton made in India, and printed with colours.

Let a charming chints, and Brussels lace.

Wrap my cold limbs, and shade my lifeless face.
Pope.

CHIOFFINE, n. f. [from chapin, Span.] A high shoe, formerly worn by ladies.

Your ladyship is nearer heaven than when I saw you last, by the altitude of a chioppine.

Shakspeare.

The woman was a giantess, and yet walked always in chioppines.

Cowley.

CHIP, CHEAP, CHIPPING, in the names of places, imply a market; from the Sax. cýppan

ceapan, to buy.
Gibson.

To CHIP, v. a. [probably corrupted from chop.]

To cut into small pieces; to diminish, by cutting away a little at a time.

His mangled Myrmidons

Noseless, handleless, hackt and chips come to him,

Crying on Hector.
Shakspeare's Troil. and Cress.

To return to our statue in the block of marble,

we see it sometimes only begun to be chipped sometimes rough hewn, and just sketched into a human figure.

Addison's Spectator.

The critick strikes out all that is not just;

And 'tis ev'n so the butler chips his crust.
King.

Industry

Taught him to chip the wood, and hew the stone.
Thomson.

CHIP, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A small piece taken off by a cutting instrument.

Cucumbers do extremely affect moisture, and over-drink themselves, which chaff or chips for-biddeth.

Bacon.

That chip made iron swim, not by natural power.
Taylor.

The straw was laid below;

Of chips and ferewood was the second row.
Dryden's Fables.

2. A small piece, however made.

The manganese lies in the vein in lumps wrecked, in an irregular manner, among clay, spar, and chips of stone.

Woodward.

CHIPPING, n. f. [from To chip.] A fragment cut off.

They dung their land with the chippings of a fort of soft stone.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

The chippings and filings of these jewels, could they be preserved, are of more value than the whole mass of ordinary authors.

Felton on the Classics.

CHIRAGICAL, adj. [chiragra, Lat.] Having the gout in the hand; subject to the gout in the hand.

Chiragical persons do suffer in the finger as well as in the rest, and sometimes first of all.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CHIROGRAPHER, n. f. [χῆρ, the hand, and γράφω, to write.]

He that exercises or professes the art or business of writing.

Thus passeth it from this office to the chirogra-

pher's to be engrossed.
Bacon's Office of Alienation.

CHIROGRAPHIST, n. f. [See CHIROGRAPHER.]

This word is used in the following passage, I think improperly, for one that tells fortunes, by examining the hand: the true word is chirographist, or chiromanter.

Let the physiognomists examine his features;

let the chirographists behold his palm; but, above all, let us consult for the calculation of his nativity.

Arbutnot and Pope.

CHIROGRAPHY, n. f. [See CHIROGRAPHER.]

The art of writing.

CHIROMANTER, n. f. [See CHIROMANCY.]

One that foretells future events by inspecting the hand.

The middle fort, who have not much to spare,

To chiromanter's cheaper art repair,

Who clap the pretty palm, to make the lines more fair.

Dryden's Juvenal.

CHIROMANCY, n. f. [χῆρ, the hand, and μαντεία,

a prophet.]

The art of foretelling the events of life, by inspecting the hand.

There is not much considerable in that doctrine of chiromancy that spots in the top of the nails, do signify things past; in the middle, things present;

and at the bottom, events to come.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To CHIRP, v. n. [perhaps contracted from cheer up. The Dutch have circken.] To make a cheerful noise; as birds, when they call without finging.

She chirping ran, he peeping flew away,

'Till hard by them both he and she did stay.
Sidney.

Came he right now to find a raven's note;

And thinks he, that the chirping of a wren

Can chase away the first conceived foud?
Shakspeare

No chirping lark the welkin sheen invokes.
Gay's Past.

The careful hen

Calls all her chirping family around.
Thomson's Spring.

To CHIRP, v. a. [This seems apparently corrupted from cheer up.] To make cheerful.

Let no sober bigot here think it a sin,

To push on the chirping and moderate bottle.
Johnson.

Sir Balaam now, he lives like other folks;

He takes his chirping pint, he cracks his jokes.
Pope.

CHIRP, n. f. [from the verb.] The voice of birds or insects.

Winds over us whisper, flocks by us did bleat,

And chirp went the grasshopper under our feet.
Spectator.

CHIRPER, n. f. [from chirp.] One that chirps;

one that is cheerful

To CHIRRE, v. n. [ceoruan, Sax.] See CHURME.

To coo as a pigeon.
Junius.

CHIRURGEON, n. f. [χῆρ, the hand, and εργον, work.] One that cures ailments, not by internal medicines, but outward applications. It is now generally pronounced, and by many written, surgeon.

When a man's wounds cease to smart, only because he has lost his feeling, they are nevertheless mortal, for his not seeing his need of a chirurgion.

South's Sermons.

CHIRURGERY, n. f. [from chirurgeon.] The art of curing by external applications. This is called Surgery.

Gynecia having skill in chirurgery, an art in those days much esteemed.

Sidney.

Nature could do nothing in her case without the help of chirurgery, in drying up the luxurious flesh, and making way to pull out the rotten bones.

Wifeman.

CHIRURGICAL, } adj. See CHIRURGEON.

CHIRURGICK, }

1. Having qualities useful in outward applications to hurts.

As to the chirurgical or physical virtues of wax,

it is reckoned a mean between hot and cold.
Mortimer.

2. Relating to the manual part of healing.

3. Manual in general, confisting in operations of the hand. This sense, though the first, according to etymology, is now scarce found.

The chirurgical or manual part doth refer to the making instruments, and exercising particular experiments.

Wilkins.

CHISEL, n. f. [ciseau, Fr. of scissum, Lat.]

An instrument with which wood or stone is pared

away.

What fine chisel

Could ever yet cut breath? Let no man mock me,

For I will kiss her.
Shakspeare.

There is such a seeming softness in the limbs, as if not a chisel had hewed them out of stone, but a penell had drawn and stroaked them in oil.

Watson's Architecture.

Imperfect shapes: in marble such are seen,

When the rude chisel does the man begin.
Dryden.

To CHISEL, v. a. [from the noun.] To cut with a chisel.

CHIT, n. f. [according to Dr. Hickes, from kind, German, child; perhaps from cbico, little,

Span.]

1. A child: a baby. Generally used of young persons in contempt.

These will appear such chits in story,

'Twill turn all politicks to jest.
Anonymous.

2. The shoot of corn from the end of the grain.

A cant term with maltsters.

Barley, couched four days, will begin to shew

the chit or sprit at the root-end.
Mortimer's Husbandry.

3. A freckle. [from chick-pease.] In this sense it is seldom used.

To CHIT, v. n. [from the noun.] To sprout:

to shoot at the end of the grain: cant.

I have known barley chit in seven hours after it had been thrown forth.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

CHITCHAT, n. f. [corrupted by reduplication

from chat.]

Prattle; idle prate; idle talk. A word only used in ludicrous conversation.

I am a member of a female society, who call ourselves the chitchat club.

Spectator.

CHITTLINGS, n. f. without singular. [from schysterling, Dut, Minshaw; from kutteln, Germ.

Skinner.] The guts; the bowels. Skinner.

CHITTY, adj. [from chit.] Childish; like a baby.

CHIVALROUS, adj. [from chivalry.] Relating to chivalry, or errant knighthood; knightly;

warlike; adventurous; daring. A word now out of use.

And noble minds of yore allied were

In brave pursuit of chivalrous emprise.
Fairy Q.

CHIVALRY, n. f. [chevalerie, Fr. knighthood, from cheval, a horse; as equus in Latin.]

1. Knighthood; a military dignity.

There be now, for martial encouragement, some degrees and orders of chivalry; which, nevertheless, are conferred promiscuously upon soldiers and no soldiers.

Bacon's Essays.

2. The qualifications of a knight; as valour;

dexterity in arms.

Thou hast slain

The flow'r of Europe for his chivalry.
Shakspeare.

I may speak it to my shame,

I have a truant been to chivalry.
Shakspeare.

3. The general system of knighthood.

Solemnly he swore,

That by the faith which knights to knighthood bore,

And whate'er else to chivalry belongs,

He would not cease 'till he reveng'd their wrongs.
Dryden.

4. An adventure; an exploit. Not now in use.

They four doing acts more dangerous, though less famous, because they were but private chival-

ries.
Sidney.

5. The body or order of knights.

And by his light

Did all the chivalry of England move

To do brave acts.
Shakspeare.

6. In law.

Seignium militare, of the French, chevalier; a tenure of land by knights service. There is no land but is holden mediately or immediately of the crown, by some service or other; and therefore are all our freeholds, that are to us and our heirs, called feuda, fees, as proceeding from the benefit of the king. As the king gave to the nobles large possessions for this or that rent and service, so they parcelled out their lands so received, for rents and services as they thought good; and those services are by Littleton divided into chivalry and socage.

The one is martial and military; the other clown-ish and rustick. Chivalry, therefore, is a tenure of service, whereby the tenant is bound to perform some noble or military office unto his lord, and is of two sorts; either regal, that is, such as may hold only of the king; or such as may also hold of a com-

a common person as well as of the king. That which may hold only of the king is properly called fergeantry, and is again divided into grand or petit, i. e. great or small. Chivalry that may hold of a common person, as well as of the king, is called feutagium. Cowell.

7. It ought properly to be written chevalry. It is a word not much used, but in old poems or romances.

CHIVÈS. n. f. [ciave, Fr. Skinner.]

1. The threads or filaments rising in flowers, with seeds at the end.

The masculine or prolific seed contained in the chives, or apices of the stamina. Ray on the Crea.

2. A species of small onion. Skinner.

CHLOROSIS. n. f. [from χλωρός, green.] The green-sickness.

TO CHOAOK. See CHOKE.

CHOCOLATE. n. f. [chocolate, Span.]

1. The nut of the cacao tree.

The tree hath a rose flower, of a great number of petals, from whose empalement arises the pointal, being a tube cut into many parts, which becomes a fruit shaped somewhat like a cucumber, and deeply furrowed, in which are contained several seeds, collected into an oblong heap, and slit down, somewhat like almonds. It is a native of America, and is found in great plenty in several places between the Tropicks, and grows wild. See COCOA. Miller.

2. The cake or mass, made by grinding the kernel of the cacao nut with other substances, to be dissolved in hot water.

The Spaniards were the first who brought chocolate into use in Europe, to promote the consumption of their cacao-nuts, achiot, and other drugs, which their West Indies furnish, and which enter the composition of chocolate. Chambers.

3. The liquor, made by a solution of chocolate in hot water.

Chocolate is certainly much the best of these three exotick liquors: its oil seems to be both rich, alimentary, and anodyne. Arbutnot on Aliments.

In fumes of burning chocolate shall glow, And tremble at the sea that froths below! Pope.

CHOCOLATE-HOUSE. n. f. [chocolate and house.] A house where company is entertained with chocolate.

Ever since that time, Lisander has been twice a day at the chocolate-house. Tatler.

CHODE. [the old preterite, from cbide.] See CHIDE.

And Jacob was wroth, and chode with Laban. Genesis.

CHOICE. n. f. [choix, Fr.]

1. The act of choosing; determination between different things proposed; election.

If you oblige me suddenly to chuse, The choice is made; for I must both refuse. Dryden.

Soft elocution doth thy style renown, Gentle or sharp, according to thy choice, To laugh at follies, or to lash at vice. Dryden.

2. The power of choosing; election.

Choice there is not, unless the thing which we take to be so in our power, that we might have refused it. If fire consume the stable, it chooseth not so to do, because the nature thereof is such that it can do no other, Hooker.

There's no liberty like the freedom of having it at my own choice, whether I will live to the world, or to myself. L'Estrange.

To talk of compelling a man to be good, is a contradiction; for where there is force, there can be no choice. Whereas all moral goodness consisteth in the elective act of the understanding will. Grew's Cosmol.

Whether he will remove his contemplation from one idea to another, is many times in his choice. Locke.

3. Care in choosing; curiosity of distinction.

Julius Cæsar did write a collection of apophthegms; it is pity his book is lost; for I imagine they were collected with judgment and choice. Bacon's Apophthegms.

4. The thing chosen; the thing taken or approved in preference to others.

Your choice is not so rich in birth as beauty:

That you might well enjoy her. Shakspeare.

Take to thee, from among the cherubim, Thy choice of flaming warriors. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Now Mars, she said, let fame exalt her voice; Nor let thy conquests only be her choice. Prior.

5. The best part of any thing, that is more properly the object of choice.

The choice and flower of all things profitable in other books, the psalms do both more briefly contain, and more movingly also express. Hooker.

Thou art a mighty prince: in the choice of our sepulchres bury thy dead. Genesis.

Their riders, the flow'r and choice Of many provinces from bound to bound. Milton.

6. Several things proposed at once, as objects of judgment and election.

A braver choice of dauntless spirits, Did never float upon the swelling tide. Shakspeare.

7. To make CHOICE of. To choose; to take from several things proposed.

Wisdom, of what herself approves, makes choice, Nor is led captive by the common voice. Denham.

CHOICE. adj. [choisi, French.]

1. Select; of extraordinary value.

After having set before the king the choicest of wines and fruits, he told him the best part of his entertainment was to come. Guardian.

Thus in a sea of folly tofs'd, My choicest hours of life are lost. Swift.

2. Chary; frugal; careful. Used of persons. He that is choice of his time, will also be choice of his company, and choice of his actions. Taylor's Holy Living.

CHOICELESS. adj. [from choice.] Without the power of choosing; without right of choice; not free.

Neither the weight of the matter of which the cylinder is made, nor the round voluble form of it, are any more imputable to that dead choiceless creature, than the first motion of it; and, therefore, it cannot be a fit resemblance to shew the reconcileableness of fate with choice. Hammond.

CHOICELY. adv. [from choice.]

1. Curiously; with exact choice.

A band of men, Collected choicely from each county some. Shakspeare.

2. Valuably; excellently. It is certain it is choicely good. Walter's Angler.

CHOIR. n. f. [chorus, Lat.]

1. An assembly or band of singers.

They now assist the choir Of angels, who their songs admire. Waller.

2. The singers in divine worship.

The choir, With all the choicest musick of the kingdom, Together sung Te Deum. Shakspeare.

3. The part of the church where the choristers or singers are placed.

The lords and ladies, having brought the queen To a prepar'd place in the choir, fell off At distance from her. Shakspeare.

TO CHOEK. v. a. [aceocan, Sax. from ceoca, the cheek or mouth. According to Minshew, from cn; from whence, probably, the Spanish, abogar.]

1. To suffocate; to kill by stopping the passage of respiration.

But when to my good lord I prove untrue, I'll choke myself. Shakspeare.

While you thunder'd, clouds of dust did choke Contending troops. Waller.

2. To stop up; to obstruct; to block up a passage.

Men troop'd up to the king's capacious court, Whose porticos were choked with the resort. Chapman.

They are at a continual expence to cleanse the ports, and keep them from being choked up, by the help of several engines. Addison on Italy.

While prayers and tears his destin'd progress stay,

And crowds of mourners choke their sov'reign's way. Tuckell.

3. To hinder by obstruction, or confinement. As two spent swimmers, that do cling together, And choke their art. Shakspeare.

She cannot lose her perfect pow'r to see, Tho' mists and clouds do choke her window-light. Davies.

It seemeth the fire is so choked, as not to be able to remove the stone. Bacon's Natural History.

You must make the mould high enough to contain the whole fruit, when it is grown to the greatest; for else you will choke the spreading of the fruit. Bacon's Natural History.

The fire, which choked in ashes lay, A load too heavy for his soul to move, Was upward blown below, and brush'd away by love. Dryden.

4. To suppress.

And yet we ventur'd; for the gain propos'd Chok'd the respect of likely peril fear'd. Shakspeare.

Confess thee freely of thy sin: For to deny each article with oath, Cannot remove nor choke the strong conception That I do groan withal. Shakspeare.

5. To overpower.

And that which fell among thorns are they, which, when they have heard, go forth, and are choked with cares, and riches, and pleasures of this life, and bring no fruit to perfection. Luke.

No fruitful crop the sickly fields return; But oats and darnel choke the rising corn. Dryden.

There would be a main defect, if such a feeding animal, and so subject unto diseases from bilious causes, should want a proper conveyance for choler. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. The humour, which, by its super-abundance, is supposed to produce irascibility.

It engenders choler, planteth anger; And better 'twere that both of us did fast, Since, of ourselves, ourselves are choleric, Than feed it with such over-roasted flesh. Shakspeare.

3. Anger; rage.

Put him to choler straight: he hath been used Ever to conquer, and to have his word Of contradiction. Shakspeare.

He, methinks, is no greater scholar, Who can mistake desire for choler. Prior.

CHOLERICK. adj. [cholericus, Latin.]

1. Abounding with choler.

Our two great poets being so different in their tempers, the one choleric and sanguine, the other phlegmatick and melancholick. Dryden.

CHORUS. n. f. [chorus, Latin.]

1. A number of singers; a concert.

The Grecian tragedy was at first nothing but a chorus of singers; afterwards one actor was introduced. Dryden.

Never did a more full and unspotted chorus of human creatures join together in a hymn of devotion. Addison.

In praise so just let every voice be join'd.
And fill the gen'ral chorus of mankind! Pope.

2. The persons who are supposed to behold what passes in the acts of a tragedy, and sing their sentiments between the acts.

For supply,
Admit me chorus to this history. Shakespeare.

3. The song between the acts of a tragedy.

4. Verses of a song in which the company join the singer.

CHOSE. [the preter tense, and sometimes the participle passive, from To choose.]

Our sovereign here above the rest might stand,
And here be chose again to rule the land. Dryden.
CHOSEN. [the participle passive, from To choose.]

If king Lewis vouchsafe to furnish us
With some few bands of chosen soldiers,
I'll undertake to land them on our coast. Shakspeare.

CHOUGH. n. f. [ceo, Sax. choucas, Fr.] A bird which frequents the rocks by the sea side, like a jackdaw, but bigger. Hammer.

In birds, kites and kestrels have a resemblance with hawks, crows with ravens, daws and choughs.
Bacon's Natural History.

To crows the like impartial grace affords,
And choughs and daws; and such republic birds. Dryden.

CHOULE. n. f. [commonly pronounced and written choul.] The crop of a bird.

The choule or crop, adhering unto the lower side of the bill, and so descending by the throat, is a bag or fachel. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO CHOUSE. v. a. [The original of this word is much doubted by Skinner, who tries to deduce it from the French gossier, to laugh at; or joncher, to wheel; and from the Teutonic kosen, to prate.
It is perhaps a fortuitous and cant word, without etymology.]

1. To cheat; to trick; to impose upon.
Freedom and zeal have chous'd you o'er and o'er;
Pray give us leave to bubble you once more. Dryd.
From London they came, silly people to chouse,
Their lands and their faces unknown. Swift.
2. It has of before the thing taken away by fraud.

When geese and pullen are seduc'd,
And fows of fucking pigs are chous'd. Hudibras.
A CHOUSE. n. f. [from the verb. This word is derived by Henslow from kiaus, or chiaus, a messenger of the Turkish court; who, says he, is little better than a fool.]

1. A bubble; a tool; a man fit to be cheated.
A foolish chouse,
Who, when a thief has robb'd his house,
Applies himself to cunning men. Hudibras.
2. A trick or sham.

TO CHO'WTER. v. n. To grumble or mutter like a froward child. Philips.

CHRISM. n. f. [χρῖσμα, an ointment.] Unguent;
or unction; it is only applied to sacred ceremonies.
One act never to be repeated, is not the thing that Christ's eternal priesthood denoted, especially by his unction or chrism, refers to.

Hammond's Practical Catechism.
CHRISOM. n. f. [See CHRISM.] A child that dies within a month after its birth. So called from the chrisom-cloth, a cloth anointed with holy unguent; which the children anciently wore till they were chrism'd.

When the convulsions were but few, the number of chrisoms and infants were greater.

Grant's Bills of Mortality.
TO CHRIS'TEN. v. a. [chrisman, Sax.]

1. To baptize; to initiate into christianity by water.

2. To name; to denominate.
Where such evils as these reign, chrissen the thing what you will, it can be no better than a mock millenium. Burnet.

CHRIS'TENDOM. n. f. [from Christ and dom.] The collective body of christianity; the regions of which the inhabitants profess the christian religion.

What hath been done, the parts of Christendom
most afflicted can best testify. Hooker.

An older and a better soldier, none
That Christendom gives out. Shakspeare.

His computation is universally received over all Christendom. Holder on Time.

CHRIS'TENING. n. f. [from the verb.] The ceremony of the first initiation into christianity.

The queen was with great solemnity crowned at Westminster, about two years after the marriage; like an old chrissening, that had staid long for godfathers. Bacon.

We shall insert the causes, why the account of chrissenings hath been neglected more than that of burials. Grant.

The day of the chrissening being come, the house was filled with gossips. Arbutnot and Pope.

CHRISTIAN. n. f. [Christianus, Lat.] A professor of the religion of Christ.

We christians have certainly the best and the holiest, the wisest and most reasonable religion in the world. Tillotson.

CHRISTIAN. adj. Professing the religion of Christ.

I'll not be made a soft and dull-ey'd fool,
To shake the head, relent, and sigh, and yield
To christian intercessors. Shakspeare.

CHRISTIAN-NAME. n. f. The name given at the font, distinct from the Gentilitious name, or surname.

CHRISTIANISM. n. f. [christianismus, Lat.]

1. The christian religion.
2. The nations professing christianity.

CHRISTIANITY. n. f. [christientè, Fr.] The religion of christians.

God doth will that couples, which are married, both infidels, if either party be converted into christianity, this should not make separation.

Every one, who lives in the habitual practice of any voluntary sin, cuts himself off from christianity. Hooker.

TO CHRIS'TIANIZE. v. a. [from christian.] To make christian; to convert to christianity.

The principles of Platonick philosophy, as it is now christianized. Dryden.

christian; as becomes one who professes the holy religion of Christ.

CHRISTMAS. n. f. [from Christ and mas.]
The day on which the nativity of our blessed Saviour is celebrated, by the particular service of the church.

A CHRISTMAS-BOX. n. f. [from christmas and box.] A box in which little presents are collected at Christmas.

When time comes round, a Christmas-box they bear,
And one day makes them rich for all the year.

Guy's Trivia.
CHRISTMAS-FLOWER. n. f. Hellebore.

CHRIST'S-THORN. n. f. [So called, as Skinner fancies, because the thorns have some likeness to a cross.] A plant.

It hath long sharp spines: the flower has five leaves, in form of a rose: out of the flower cup, which is divided into several segments, rises the pointal, which becomes a fruit, shaped like a bonnet, having a shell almost globular, which is divided into three cells, in each of which is contained a roundish seed. This is by many persons supposed to be the plant from which our Saviour's crown of thorns was composed. Miller.

CHROMATICK. adj. [χρῶμα, colour.]

1. Relating to colour.

I am now come to the third part of painting,
which is called the chromatick, or colouring.

2. Relating to a certain species of ancient music, now unknown.

It was observed he never touched his lyre in such a truly chromatick and enharmonick manner.

Arbutnot and Pope.
CHRONICAL. } adj. [from χρῶμα, time.]

A chronical distemper is of length; as dropfies, astmas, and the like.

Of diseases some are chronical, and of long duration: as, quartane agues, scurvy, wherein we defer the cure unto more advantageous seasons.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.
The lady's use of these excellencies is to divert the old man, when he is out of the pangs of a chronical distemper.

CHRONICLE. n. f. [chronique, Fr. from χρῶμα,
time.]

1. A register or account of events in order of time.

No more yet of this;
For tis a chronicle of day by day,
Not a relation for a breakfast.

2. A history. Shakspeare.

You lean too confidently on those Irish chronicles, which are most fabulous and forged.

Spenser on Ireland.
If from the field I should return once more,
I and my sword will earn my chronicle.

Shakspeare's Antony and Cleopatra.
I'm traduc'd by tongues, which neither know
My faculties nor person, yet will be

The chronicles of my doing. Shakspeare.
I gave up to historians the generals and heroes which crowd their annals, together with those which you are to produce for the British chronicle.

Dryden.
TO CHRONICLE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To record in chronicle, or history.

This to rehearse, should rather be to chronicle times than to search into reformation of abuses in that realm. Spenser.

2. To register; to record.

For now the devil, that told me I did well,
Says that this deed is chronicled in hell. Shakspeare.

Love is your master; for he matters you;
And he that is so yoked by a fool,
Methinks, should not be chronicled for wife.

Shakspeare.
I shall be the jest of the town; nay, in two days I expect to be chronicled in ditty, and sung in woeful ballad. Congreve.

CHRONICLER. n. f. [from chronicle.]

1. A writer of chronicles; a recorder of events in order of time.

Here gathering chroniclers, and by them stand
Giddy fantastick poets of each land. Donne.

2. A historian; one that keeps up the memory of things past.

I do herein rely upon these bards, or Irish chroniclers. Spenser.

This custom was held by the Druids and bards of our ancient Britons, and of latter times by the Irish chroniclers, called rimers.

Raleigh's History of the World.
CHRONOGRAM. n. f. [χρῶμα, time, and γράφω, to write.] An inscription including the date of any action.

Of this kind the following is an example:
Gloria lausque Deo, facLorVM in facV la funto.

A chronogrammatical verse, which includes not only this year 1660, but numerical letters enough to reach above a thousand years further, until the year 2867. Howel.

CHRONOGRAMMATIC. adj. [from chronogram.] Belonging to a chronogram. See the last example.

CHRONOGRAMMATIST. n. f. [from chronogram.]
A writer of chronograms.

There are foreign universities, where as you praise a man in England for being an excellent philosopher or poet, it is an ordinary character to be a great chronogrammatist. Addison.

CHRONOLOGER. n. f. [χρῶμα, time, and λόγος, doctrine.] He that studies or explains the science of computing past time, or of ranging past events
according to their proper years.

Chronologers differ among themselves about most great epochs. Holder on Time.

CHRONOLOGICAL. adj. [from chronology.] Relating to the doctrine of time.

Thus much touching the chronological account of some times and things past, without confining myself to the exactness of years.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.
CHRONOLOGICALLY. adv. [from chronological.]
In a chronological manner; according to the laws or rules of chronology; according to the exact series of time.

CHRONOLOGIST. n. f. [See CHRONOLOGER.]
One that studies or explains time; one that ranges past events according to the order of time; a chro-nologer.

According to these chronologists, the prophecy of the Rabin that the world should last but six thousand years, has been long disproved.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.
All that learned noise and dust of the chronologist is wholly to be avoided. Locke on Education.

CHRONOLOGY. n. f. [χρῶμα, time, and λόγος,
Vol. I. N^o. 8. N a doc-doctrine.] The science of computing and adjusting the periods of time; as the revolution of the sun and moon; and of computing time past, and referring each event to the proper year.

And the measure of the year not being so perfectly known to the ancients, rendered it very difficult for them to transmit a true chronology to succeeding ages.

Where I allude to the customs of the Greeks, I believe I may be justified by the strictest chronology; though a poet is not obliged to the rules that confine an historian.

CHRONOMETER. n. f. [χρῶν, and μετρον.] An instrument for the exact measurement of time.

According to observation made with a pendulum chronometer, a bullet, at its first discharge, flies five hundred and ten yards in five half seconds.

CHRY'SALIS. n. f. [from χρῶς, gold, because of the golden colour in the nymphs of some insects.] A term used by some naturalists for aurelia, or the first apparent change of the maggot of any species of insects.

CHRY'SOLITE. n. f. [χρῶς, gold, and λίθος, a stone.] A precious stone of a dusky green, with a cast of yellow.

Such another world,
Of one intire and perfect chrysolite.
I'd not have fold her for.

If metal, part seem'd gold, part silver clear:
If stone, carbuncle moist, or chrysolite.

CHRY'SOPRASUS. n. f. [χρῶς, gold, and πράσινος, green.] A precious stone of a yellow colour, approaching to green.

The ninth a topaz, the tenth a chryso-prasus.

CHUB. n. f. [from cop, a great head, Skinner.] A river fish. The chevin.

The chub is in prime from Midmay to Candlemas, but best in winter. He is full of small bones: he eats waterish; not firm, but limp and tasteless: nevertheless he may be so dressed as to make him very good meat.

CHUBBED. adj. [from chub.] Big-headed like a chub.

To CHUCK. v. n. [A word probably formed in imitation of the sound that it expresses; or perhaps corrupted from chick.] To make a noise like a hen, when she calls her chickens.

To CHUCK. v. a.
1. To call as a hen calls her young.
Then crowing, clapp'd his wings, th' appointed call,
To chuck his wives together in the hall.

2. To give a gentle blow under the chin, so as to make the mouth strike together.

Come, chuck the infant under the chin, force a smile, and cry, Ah, the boy takes after his mother's relations.

CHUCK. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The voice of a hen.

He made the chuck four or five times, that people use to make to chickens when they call them.

CHURCH. n. f. [ance, Sax. kyrca.]
1. The collective body of christians, usually termed the catholic church.

The church, being a supernatural society, doth differ from natural societies in this; that the persons unto whom we associate ourselves in the one, are men, simply considered as men; but they to whom we be joined in the other, are God, angels, and holy men.

2. The body of christians adhering to one particular opinion, or form of worship.

The church is a religious assembly, or the large fair building where they meet; and sometimes the same word means a synod of bishops, or of prebys; and in some places it is the pope and a general council.

3. The place which christians consecrate to the worship of God.

It comprehends the whole church, viz. the name or body of the church, together with the chancel, which is even included under the word church.

That churches were consecrated unto none but the Lord only, the very general name chiefly doth sufficiently shew: church doth signify no other thing than the Lord's house.

Tho' you unty the winds, and let them fight Against the churches.

4. It is used frequently in conjunction with other words; as church-member, the member of a church; church-power, spiritual or ecclesiastical authority.

To CHURCH. v. a. [from the noun.] To perform with any one the office of returning thanks in the church, after any signal deliverance, as from the danger of childbirth.

CHURCH-AL. n. f. [from church and ale.] A wake, or feast, commemorative of the dedication of the church.

For the church-ale, two young men of the parish are yearly chosen to be wardens, who make collection among the parishioners of what provision it pleaseth them to bestow.

CHURCH-ATTIRE. n. f. The habit in which men officiate at divine service.

These and such like were their discourses, touching that church-attire, which with us for the most part is used in publick prayer.

CHURCH-AUTHORITY. n. f. Ecclesiastical power; spiritual jurisdiction.

In this point of church-authority, I have sifted all the little scraps alleged.

The bishop has the care of seeing that all christians, after their deaths, be not denied church-burial, according to the usage and custom of the place.

CHURCH-FOUNDER. n. f. He that builds or endows a church.

Whether emperors or bishops in those days were church-founders, the solemn dedication of churches they thought not to be a work in itself either vain or superstitious.

CHURCHMAN. n. f. [church and man.]
1. An ecclesiastick; a clergyman; one that ministers in sacred things.

If any thing be offered to you touching the church and churchmen, or church-government, rely not only upon yourself.

A very difficult work to do, to reform and reduce a church into order, that had been so long neglected, and that was so ill filled by many weak and more wilful churchmen.

Patience in want, and poverty of mind, These marks of church and churchmen he design'd,

And living taught, and dying left behind.

2. An adherent to the church of England.

CHURCH-WARDENS. n. f. [See WARDEN.] Officers yearly chosen, by the consent of the minister and parishioners, according to the custom of each place, to look to the church, church-yard, and such things as belong to both; and to observe the behaviour of the parishioners, for such faults as appertain to the jurisdiction or censure of the ecclesiastical court. They are a kind of corporation, enabled by law to sue for any thing belonging to their church, or poor of their parish.

There should likewise church-wardens, of the gravest men in the parish, be appointed, as they be here in England.

Our church-wardens Feast on the silver, and give us the farthings.

CHURCHYARD. n. f. The ground adjoining to the church, in which the dead are buried; a cemetery.

I am almost afraid to stand alone Here in the churchyard, yet I will adventure.

In churchyards, where they bury much, the earth will consume the corps in far shorter time than other earth will.

No place so sacred from such fops is barr'd; Nor is Paul's church more safe than Paul's churchyard.

CHURL. n. f. [ceopl, Sax. carl, in German, is strong, rusticks being always observed to be strong bodied.]

1. A rustick; a countryman; a labourer.

He holdeth himself a gentleman, and scorneth to work or use any hard labour, which he faith is the life of a peasant or churl.

One of the baser sort, which they call churls, being reproved for his oath, answered confidently, that his lord commanded him.

Churl, upon thy eyes I throw All the pow'r this charm doth owe.

From this light cause th' infernal maid prepares The country churls to mischief, hate, and wars.

2. A rude, furly, ill-bred man.

A churl's courtesy rarely comes, but either for gain or falsehood.

3. A miser; a niggard; a selfish or greedy wretch.

One captain Spurio with his cicatrice, an emblem of war, here on his finister cheek.

Shakespeare.

2. A mark; an impression: so used by Shake- peare less properly.

Lean but upon a rush

The cicatrice and capable impressure
Thy palm some moment keeps.

Shakespeare.

CICATRISANT. n. f. [from cicatrice.] An application that induces a cicatrice.

CICATRISIVE. adj. [from cicatrice.] Having the qualities proper to induce a cicatrice.

CICATRIZATION. n. f. [from cicatrice.]

1. The act of healing the wound.

A vein bursted, or corroded in the lungs, is looked upon to be for the most part incurable, because of the motion and coughing of the lungs,
tearing the gap wider, and hindering the conglutination and cicatrization of the vein.

Harvey.

2. The state of being healed, or skinned over.

The first stage of healing, or the discharge of matter, is called digestion; the second, or the filling up with flesh, incarnation; and the last or skinning over, cicatrization.

Sherr's Surgery.

To CICATRIZE. v. a. [from cicatrix.]

1. To apply such medicines to wounds, or ulcers, as heal and skin them over.

Quincy.

2. To heal and induce the skin over a sore.

We incarned, and in a few days cicatrized it with a smooth cicatrix.

Wijeman on Tumors.

CICELY. n. f. [myrrhis.] A sort of herb.

CICHOACEOUS. adj. [from cichorium, Lat.]
Having the qualities of succory.

Diureticks evacuate the salt serum; as all acid diureticks, and the testaceous and bitter cichoraceous plants.

Floyer.

CICHLID-PEASE. n. f. [cicor.] A plant.

To CICURATE. v. a. [cicare, Lat.] To tame; to reclaim from wildness; to make tame and tractable.

Poisons may yet retain some portion of their natures; yet are so refracted, cicuated, and subdued, as not to make good their destructive malignities.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CICURATION. n. f. [from cicurate.] The act of taming or reclaiming from wildness.

This holds not only in domestic and manfute birds; for then it might be the effect of cicuration or institution; but in the wild.

Ray on the Creation.

CIDER. n. f. [cidre, Fr. sidra, Ital. sidra,
Lat. cidra, שכר.]

1. All kinds of strong liquors, except wine.
This sense is now wholly obsolete.

2. Liquors made of the juice of fruits pressed.
We had also drink, wholesome and good wine of the grape, a kind of cider made of a fruit of that country; a wonderful pleasing and refreshing drink.

Bacon.

3. The juice of apples expressed and fermented. This is now the sense.

To the utmost bounds of this

Wide universe Silurian cider born,
Shall please all tastes, and triumph o'er the vine.

Philips.

CIDERIST. n. f. [from cider.] A maker of cider.

When the ciderists have taken care for the best fruit, and ordered them after the best manner they could, yet hath their cider generally proved pale, sharp, and ill tasted.

Mortimer.

CIDERKIN. n. f. [from cider.]

A low word used for the liquor made of the musk or grois matter of apples, after the cider is pressed out, and a convenient quantity of boiled water added to it; the whole infusing for above forty eight hours.

Philips's World of Words.

Ciderkin is made for common drinking, and supplies the place of small beer.

Mortimer.

CIELING. n. f. See CEILING.

CIERGE. n. f. [Fr.] A candle carried in processions.

CILIARY. adj. [cilium, Lat.] Belonging to the eyelids.

The ciliary processes, or rather the ligaments, observed in the inside of the sclerotick tunics of the eye, do serve instead of a muscle, by the contraction, to alter the figure of the eye.

Ray on the Creation.

CILICIOUS. adj. [from cilicium, hair-cloth,
Lat.] Made of hair.

A garment of camel's hair; that is, made of some texture of that hair, a coarse garment, a cili- cious or sackcloth habit, suitable to the austerity of his life.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CIMELIARCH. n. f. [from καμυλάρχης.] The chief keeper of plate, vestments, and things of value belonging to a church; a church-warden.

D'A.

CYMETER. n. f. [cimitarra, Span. and Portug. from cimeter, Turkish. Blount's Portuguese Dictionary.] A sort of sword used by the Turks; short; heavy; and recurved, or bent backward. This word is sometimes erroneously spelt fimitar, and scymeter; as in the following examples.

By this scimitar,
That slew the foppy and a Persian prince,
That won three fields of sultan Solymán. Shaksp.
Our armours now may rust, our idle scymeters
Hang by our sides for ornament, not use. Dry.
CINCTURE. n. f. [cinctura, Latin.]
1. Something worn round the body.
Now happy he, whose cloak and cincture
Hold out this tempest. Shaksp.
Columbus found th' American, so girt
With feather'd cincture, naked else, and wild.

He binds the sacred cincture round his breast.

2. An inclosure.

The court and prison being within the cincture of one wall. Bacon's Henry VII.

3. [In architecture.] A ring or list at the top and bottom of the shaft of a column; separating the shaft at one end from the base, at the other from the capital. It is supposed to be in imitation of the girths or ferrils anciently used, to strengthen and preserve the primitive wood-columns. Cham.

CINDER. n. f. [cindre, Fr. from cineres, Lat.]
1. A mass ignited and quenched, without being reduced to ashes.

I should make very forges of my cheeks,
That would to cinders burn up modesty,
Did but I speak thy deeds! Shaksp.
There is in smiths cinders, by some adhesion of iron, sometimes to be found a magnetical operation. Brown.

So snow on Ætna does unmelted lie,
Whose rolling flames and scatter'd cinders fly.

2. A hot coal that has ceased to flame.

If from adown the hopeful chops
The fat upon the cinder drops,
To stinking smoke it turns the flame. Swift.
CINDER-WENCH. n. f. [cinder and woman.] A CINDER-WOMAN. f. woman whose trade is to take in heaps of ashes for cinders.
'Tis under so much nasty rubbish laid,
To find it out's the cinder-woman's trade.

She had above five hundred suits of fine cloaths,
and yet went abroad like a cinder-wench.

In the black form of cinder-wench she came,
When love, the hour, the place had banish'd shame.

CINERATION. n. f. [from cineres, Lat.]
The reduction of any thing by fire to ashes. A term of chymistry.

CINERITIOUS. adj. [cinericius, Lat.] Having the form or state of ashes.

tious* part of the brain, and are terminated in all parts of the body. Cheyne.

CINERULENT. adj. [from cineres, Lat.] Full of ashes. Dici.

CINGLE. n. f. [from cingulum, Lat.] A girth for a horse. Difi.

CINNABAR. n. f. [cinnabaris, Lat.] Cinnabar is native or factitious: the factitious cinnabar is called vermilion.

Cinnabar is the ore out of which quicksilver is drawn, and consists partly of a mercurial, and partly of a sulphureous matter.

The particles of mercury uniting with the particles of sulphur, compose cinnabar. Newton's Opt.
CINNABAR of Antimony, is made of mercury, sulphur, and crude antimony.

CINNAMON. n. f. [cinnamomum, Lat.] The fragrant bark of a low tree in the island of Ceylon.
Its leaves resemble those of the olive, both as to substance and colour. The fruit resembles an acorn or olive, and has neither the smell nor taste of the bark. When boiled in water, it yields an oil, which, as it cools and hardens, becomes as firm and white as tallow; the smell of which is agreeable in candles. The cinnamon of the ancients was different from ours. Chambers.

Let Araby extol her happy coast,
Her cinnamon and sweet amomum boast.

CINNAMON Water is made by distilling the bark, first infused in barley water, in spirit of wine or white wine. Dryden's Fables.

CINQUE. n. f. [Fr.] A Five. It is used in games alone; but it is often compounded with other words. Chambers.

CINQUE-FOIL. n. f. [cinque feuille, Fr.] A kind of five leaved clover.

CINQUE-PACE. n. f. [cinque pas, Fr.] A kind of grave dance.

Woing, wedding, and repenting, is a Scotch jig, a measure, and a cinque-pace. The first suit hot and hasty, like a Scotch jig, and full as fantastical; the wedding, mannerly and modest, as a measure, full of state and gravity; and then comes repentance, and, with his bad legs falls into the cinque-pace faster and faster, 'till he sinks into his grave. Shaksp.

CINQUE-PORTS. n. f. [cinque ports, Fr.]
Those havens that lie towards France, and therefore have been thought by our kings to be such as ought most vigilantly to be observed against invasion. In which respect, the places where they are, have a special governor or keeper, called by his office Lord Warden of the cinque ports; and divers privileges granted to them, as a particular jurisdiction, their warden having the authority of an admiral among them, and sending out writs in his own name. The cinque ports are Dover, Sandwich, Rye, Hastings, Winchelsea, Rumney, and Hithe; some of which, as the number exceeds five, must either be added to the first institution by some later grant, or accounted as appendants to some of the rest. Corwel.

They, that bear
The cloth of state above her, are four barons
Of the cinque ports. Shaksp.

CINQUE-SPOTTED. adj. Having five spots.

On her left breast
A mole, cinque spotted, like the crimson drops
I th' bottom of a cowslip. Shaksp.

CION. n. f. [cion, or scion, French.]
1. A sprout; a shoot from a plant.

We have reason to cool our raging motions, our carnal stings, our unbitted lusts; whereof I take this that you call love, to be a sect or cion.

The stately Caledonian oak, newly settled in his triumphant throne, begirt with cions of his own royal stem. Howel.

2. The shoot engrafted or inserted on a stock.

The cion over-ruleth the stock; and the stock is but passive, and giveth aliment, but no motion to the graft. Bacon.

CIPHER. n. f. [chifre, Fr. zifra, Ital. cifra, low Lat. from an oriental root.]

1. An arithmetical character, by which some number is noted; a figure.

2. An arithmetical mark, which, standing for nothing itself, increases the value of the other figures.

Mine were the very cipher of a function,
To find the faults, whose fine stands in record,
And let go by the actor. Shaksp.

If the people be somewhat in the election, you cannot make them nulls or ciphers in the privation or translation. Bacon.

As, in accounts, ciphers and figures pass for real sums, so names pass for things. South.

3. An intertexture of letters engraved usually on boxes or plate.

Troy flam'd in burnish'd gold; and o'er the throne,

Arms and the man in golden ciphers shone. Pope.

Some mingling stir the melted tar, and some Deep on the new-thorn vagrant's heaving side,
To stamp the master's cipher, ready stand. Thomson.

4. A character in general.

In succeeding times this wisdom began to be written in ciphers and characters, and letters bearing the form of creatures. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

5. A secret or occult manner of writing, or the key to it.

This book, as long liv'd as the elements,
In cipher writ, or new-made idioms. Donne.

He was pleased to command me to stay at London, to send and receive all his letters; and I was furnished with several ciphers, in order to it.

To CIPHER. v. n. [from the noun.] To practise arithmetic.

You have been bred to business; you can cipher:
I wonder you never used your pen and ink.

To CIPHER. v. a. To write in occult characters.

He frequented sermons, and penned notes: his notes he ciphered with Greek characters. Hayward.

To CIRCINATE. v. a. [circino, Lat.] To make a circle; to compass round, or turn round. Bailey.

CIRCINATION. n. f. [circinatio, Lat.] An or-bicular motion; a turning round; a measuring with the compasses. Bailey.

CIRCLE. n. f. [circulus, Latin.]

1. A line continued 'till it ends where it begun, having all its parts equidistant from a common centre.

Any thing, that moves round about in a circle, in less time than our ideas are wont to succeed one another in our minds, is not perceived to move;
but seems to be a perfect intire circle of that matter, or colour, and not a part of a circle in motion. Locke.

By a circle I understand not here a perfect geometrical circle, but an orbicular figure, whose length is equal to its breadth; and which as to sense may seem circular. Newton's Opticks.

Then a deeper still
In circle following circle, gathers round
To clothe the face of things. Thomson's Summer.

2. The space included in a circular line.

3. A round body; an orb.

It is he that sitteth upon the circle of the earth.

son.

To have a box where eunuchs sing,
And, foremost in the circle, eye a king.

6. A company; an assembly.

I will call over to him the whole circle of beauties that are disposed among the boxes. Addison.

Ever since that time, Lifander visits in every circle. Taylor.

7. Any series ending as it begins, and perpetually repeated.

There be fruit trees in hot countries, which have blossoms and young fruit, and young fruit and ripe fruit, almost all the year, succeeding one another; but this circle of ripening cannot be but in succulent plants, and hot countries. Bacon.

Thus in a circle runs the peasant's pain,
And the year rolls within itself again.

8. An inconclusive form of argument, in which the foregoing proposition is proved by the following, and the following proposition inferred from the foregoing.

That heavy bodies descend by gravity; and again, that gravity is a quality whereby an heavy body descends, is an impertinent circle, and teacheth nothing. Glanville's Sceptic.

The fallacy called a circle, is when one of the premisses in a syllogism is questioned and opposed, and we intend to prove it by the conclusion.

9. Circumlocution; indirect form of words.

Has he given the lye
In circle or oblique, or semicircle,
Or direct parallel? You must challenge him.

10. Circles

70. CIRCLES of the German Empire. Such provinces and principalities as have a right to be present at diets. They are in number ten. Trevoux.
To CIRCLE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To move round any thing.

The lords that were appointed to circle the hill, had some days before planted themselves in places convenient. Bacon.

Another Cynthia her new journey runs,
And other planets circle other suns. Pope's Dunciad.

2. To inclose, to furround.

What stern ungente hands

Have lopp'd and hew'd, and made thy body bare
Of her two branches, those sweet ornaments, Whose circling shadows kings have sought to sleep in? Shakespeare.

While these fond arms, thus circling you, may prove
More heavy chains than those of hopelefs love. Prior.

Unseen, he glided through the joyous crowd,
With darkness circled, and an ambient cloud. Pope.

3. To CIRCLE in. To confine; to keep together.
We term those things dry which have a confidence within themselves, and which, to enjoy a determinate figure, do not require the stop or hindrance of another body to limit and circle them in. Digby on Bodies.

To CIRCLE. v. n. To move circularly; to end where it begins.

The well fraught bowl
Circles incessant; whilst the humble cell
With quivering laugh, and rural jests refunds. Philips.

Now the circling years disclose
The day predestin'd to reward his woes. Pope's Odyss.

CIRCLED. adj. [from circle.] Having the form of a circle; round.

Th' inconstant moon,
That monthly changes in her circled orb. Shaksp.
CIRCLET. n. f. [from circle.] A circle; an orb; properly a little circle.

Then take repast, 'till Hesperus display'd
His golden circlet in the western shade. Pope's Odyss.

CIRCLING. participial adj. [from To circle.] Having the form of a circle; circular; round.

Round he surveys, and well might, where he stood
So high above the circling canopy
Of night's extended shade. Milton's Paradise Lost.

CIRCUIT. n. f. [from circuit, Fr. circuitus, Latin.]

1. The act of moving round any thing.
There are four moons also perpetually rolling round the planet Jupiter, and carried along with him in his periodical circuit round the sun. Watts on the Mind.

2. The space inclosed in a circle.
He led me up.
A woody mountain, whose high top was plain
A circuit wide inclos'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. Space; extent; measured by travelling round.
He attributeth unto it smallness, in respect of circuit. Hooker.

The lake of Bolsena is reckoned one and twenty miles in circuit. Addison on Italy.

4. A ring; a diadem; that by which any thing is incircled.
And this fell tempest shall not cease to rage,
Until the golden circuit on my head
Do calm the fury of this mad-brain'd flaw. Shakespeare.

5. The visitations of the judges for holding assizes.
The circuits, in former times, went both round about the pale; as the circuit of the cynosura about the pole. Davies.

6. The tract of country visited by the judges.
7. Long deduction of reason.
Up into the watch tower get,
And see all things despoil'd of fallacies;
Thou shalt not peep thro' letices of eyes,
Nor hear thro' labyrinths of ears, nor learn
By circuit or collections to discern. Donne.

CIRCUIT of Action. [In law.] Is a longer course of proceeding to recover the thing sued for than is needful. Cowel.

To CIRCULATE. v. a. [from the noun.] To move circularly.

Pining with equinoctial heat, unless
The cordial cup perpetual motion keep,
Quick circulating. Philips.

CIRCULATE. v. n. f. [from circuit.] One that travels a circuit.

Like your fellow circulate the fun: you travel the round of the earth, and behold all the iniquities under the heavens. Pope.

CIRCULATION. n. f. [circutio, Lat.]

1. The act of going round any thing.
2. Compass; maze of argument.

To apprehend by what degrees they lean to things in show, though not indeed repugnant one to another, requireth more sharpness of wit, more intricate circulations of discourse, and depth of judgment, than common ability doth yield. Hooker.

CIRCULAR. adj. [circularis, Latin.]

1. Round, like a circle; circumscribed by a circle. The frame thereof seem'd partly circular, And part triangular. Fairy Queen.

He first inclos'd for lifts a level ground;
The form was circular. Dryden's Fables.

Nero's port, compos'd of huge moles running round it, in a kind of circular figure. Addison on Italy.

2. Successive in order; always returning.
From whence th' innumerable race of things,
By circular successive order springs. Roscommon.

3. Vulgar; mean; circumforaneous.
Had Virgil been a circular poet, and closely adhered to history, how could the Romans have had Dido? Dennis.

4. Ending in itself, used of a paregism, where the second proposition at once proves the first, and is proved by it.

One of Cartes's first principles of reasoning, after he had doubted of every thing, seems to be too circular, to safely build upon; for he is for proving the being of God from the truth of our faculties, and the truth of our faculties from the being of a God. Baker's Reflections on Learning.

5. CIRCULAR Letter. A letter directed to several persons, who have the same interest in some common affair; as in the convocation of assemblies.

6. CIRCULAR Lines. Such strait lines as are divided from the divisions made in the arch of a circle; as the lines of sines, tangents, and secants on the plain scale and sector.

7. CIRCULAR Sailing, is that performed on the arch of a great circle.

CIRCULARITY. n. f. [from circular.] A circular form.

The heavens have no diversity or difference, but a simplicity of parts, and equiformity in motion, continually succeeding each other; so that, from what point soever we compute, the account will be common unto the whole circularity. Brown.

CIRCULARLY. adv. [from circular.]

1. In form of a circle.
The internal form of it consists of several regions, involving one another like orbs about the same centre, or of the several elements cast circularly about each other. Burnet.

2. With a circular motion.
Trade, which, like blood, should circularly flow, Stopp'd in their channels, found its freedom lost. Dryden.

Every body moved circularly about any centre, recedes, or endeavours to recede, from that centre of its motion. Ray.

To CIRCULATE. v. n. [from circulus.]

1. To move in a circle; to run round; to return to the place whence it departed in a constant course.

If our lives motions theirs must imitate,
Our knowledge, like our blood, must circulate. Denham.

Nature is a perpetual motion; and the work of the universe circulates without any interval or repose. L'Estrange.

2. To be dispersed.
As the mints of calumny are perpetually at work, a great number of curious inventions, issued out from time to time, grow current among the party, and circulate through the whole kingdom. Addison.

To CIRCULATE. v. a. To put about.

In the civil wars, the money spent on both sides was circulated at home; no publick debts contracted. Swift.

CIRCULATION. n. f. [from circulate.]

1. Motion in a circle; a course in which the motion tends to the point from which it began.

What more obvious, one would think, than the circulation of the blood, unknown 'till the last age? Burnet's Theory.

As much blood passeth through the lungs as through all the rest of the body: the circulation is quicker, and heat greater, and their texture extremely delicate. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. A series in which the same order is always observed, and things always returns to the same state.

As for the sins of peace, thou hast brought upon us the miseries of war; so for the sins of war, thou feest fit to deny us the blessing of peace, and to keep us in a circulation of miseries. King Charles.

God, by the ordinary rule of nature permits this continual circulation of human things. Swift on Modern Education.

3. A reciprocal interchange of meaning.

When the apostle faith of the Jews, that they crucified the Lord of glory; and when the Son of man, being on earth, affirmeth that the Son of man was in heaven at the same instant, there is in these two speeches that mutual circulation before-mentioned. Hooker.

CIRCULATORY. n. f. [from circulate.] A chymical vessel, in which that which rises from the vessel on the fire, is collected and cooled in another fixed upon it, and falls down again.

CIRCULATORY. adj. [from circulate.] Circulatory Letters are the same with CIRCULAR Letters.

CIRCUMAMBENCY. adj. n. f. [from circumambient.] The act of encompassing.

Ice receiveth its figure according unto the surface it concreteth, or the circumambency which conformeth it. Brown.

CIRCUMAMBIENT. adj. [circum and ambio, Latin.] Surrounding; encompassing; inclosing.

The circumambient coldness towards the sides of the vessel like the second region, cooling and condensing of it. Wilkins.

CIRCUMCISION. n. f. [from circumcise.] The rite or act of cutting off the foreskin.

They left a race behind
Like to themselves, distinguishable scarce
From Gentiles, but by circumcision vain. Milton.

To CIRCUMDUCE. v. a. [circumduco, Lat.] To contravene; to nullify: a term of civil law.

Acts of judicature may be cancelled and circumducted by the will and direction of the judge; as also by the consent of the parties litigant, before the judge has pronounced and given sentence. Ayliffe's Parergon.

CIRCUMDUCTION. n. f. [from circumduco.]

1. Nullification; cancellation.
The citation may be circumducted, though the defendant should not appear; and the defendant must be cited, as a circumduction requires. Ayliffe's Parergon.

2. A leading about.
By long circumduction perhaps any truth may be derived from any other truth. Hooker.

CIRCUMFERENCE. n. f. [circumferentia, Lat.]

1. The periphery; the line including and surrounding any thing.
Extend thus far thy bounds,
This be thy just circumference, O world! Milton.
Because the hero is the centre of the main action. all all the lines from the circumference tend to him alone. Dryden.

Fire, moved roundly in the circumference of a circle, makes the whole circumference appear like a circle of fire. Newton.

2. The space inclosed in a circle.

So was his will

Pronounc'd among the gods, and by an oath,
That shook heav'n's whole circumference, confirm'd. Milton.

And fall these sayings from that gentle tongue,
Where civil speech and soft persuasion hung? Prior.

11. Grave; sober; not gay or shewy.

Thus night oft see me in thy pale career,
'Till civil suited morn appear. Milton's Poems.

12. Relating to the ancient consular or imperial government; as, civil law.]

No woman had it but a civil doctor. Shakespeare.

CIVILIAN. n. f. [civilis, Lat.] One that professes the knowledge of the old Roman law, and of general equity.

The professors of that law, called civilians; because the civil law is their guide, should not be discountenanced nor discouraged. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

A depending kingdom is a term of art, unknown to all ancient civilians, and writers upon government. Swift.

CIVILISATION. n. f. [from civil.] A law, act of justice, or judgment, which renders a criminal process civil; which is performed by turning an information into an inquest, or the contrary. Harri.

CIVILITY. n. f. [from civil.]

1. Freedom from barbarity; the state of being civilised.

The English were at first as stout and warlike a people as the Irish; and yet are now brought unto that civility, that no nation excelleth them in all goodly conversation, and all the studies of knowledge and humanity. Spenser.

Divers great monarchies have risen from barbarism to civility, and fallen again to ruin. Darwin on Ireland.

Wherefoe'er her conquering eagles fled,
Arts, learning, and civility were spread. Danham's Poems.

2. Politeness; complaisance; elegance of behaviour.

Art thou thus bolden'd, man, by thy distress;
Or else a rude despiser of good manners,
That in civility thou seem'st to empty? Shakespeare.

He, by his great civility and affability, wrought very much upon the people. Clarendon.

I should be kept from a publication, did not what your civility calls a request, your greatness, command. South.

We, in point of civility, yield to others in our own houses. Swift.

3. Rule of decency; practice of politeness.

Love taught him shame; and shame, with love at strife,
Soon taught the sweet civilities of life. Dryden.

To CIVILIZE. v. a. [from civil.] To reclaim from savageness and brutality; to instruct in the arts of regular life.

We send the graces and the muses forth,
To civilize and to instruct the North. Waller.

Musæus first, then Orpheus civilize
Mankind, and gave the world their deities. Danham.

Amongst those who are counted the civilized part of mankind, this original law of nature still takes place. Locke.

For her the ground is clad in cheerful green. Dryd.

The courtiers were all most magnificently clad. Swift.

To CLAIM. v. a. [clamer, French.] To demand of right; to require authoritatively; not to beg or accept as favour, but to exact as due.

If only one man hath a divine right to obedience, no body can claim that obedience but he that can shew his right. Locke.

We must know how the first ruler, from whom any one claims, came by his authority, before we can know who has a right to succeed him in it. Locke.

Poets have undoubted right to claim,

If not the greatest, the most lasting name. Congreve.

CLAIM. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A demand of any thing, as due.

You, in the right of lady Blanch your wife,

May then make all the claim that Arthur did. Shakespeare.

Forforn thyself! The traitor's odious name
I first return, and then disprove thy claim. Dryden.

Will he not, therefore, of the two evils chuse
the least, by submitting to a master, who hath no immediate claim upon him, rather than to another, who hath already revived several claims upon him? Swift.

2. A title to any privilege or possession in the hands of another.

Either there must have been but one sovereign over them all, or else every father of a family had been as good a prince, and had as good a claim to royalty as these. Locke.

3. In law.

A demand of any thing that is in the possession of another, or at the least out of his own: as claim by charter, claim by descent. Cowel.

4. The phrases are commonly to make claim, or to lay claim.

The king of Prussia lays in his claim for Neuf-Châtel, as he did for the principality of Orange. Addison on Italy.

If God, by positive grant, gave dominion to any man, primogeniture can lay no claim to it, unless God ordained. Locke.

CLAIMABLE. adj. [from claim.] That which may be demanded as due.

CLAIMANT. n. f. [from claim.] He that demands any thing as unjustly detained by another.

CLAIMER. n. f. [from claim.] He that makes a demand; he that requires any thing, as unjustly with-held from him.

CLAIR-OBSCURE. n. f. See CLARE OBSCURE.

To CLAMBER. v. n. [probably corrupted from climb; as climber, clamber.] To climb with difficulty; as with both hands and feet.

The kitchen malkin pins
Her richest lockram 'bout her reechy neck, Clamb'ring the walls to eye him. Shakespeare.

When you hear the drum,
Clamber not you up to the casements then. Shakespeare.

The men there do not without some difficulty clamber up the acclivities, dragging their kine with them. Ray.

They were forced to clamber over so many rocks, and to tread upon the brink of so many precipices, that they were very often in danger of their lives. Addison's Freeholder.

To CLAMM. v. a. [in some provinces, to clann from clæman, Sax. to glew together.] To clog with any glutinous matter.

A swarm of wasps got into a honey-pot, and there they cloyed and clammed themselves, 'till there was no getting out again. L'Estrange.

glew. Moxon.

CLAMMY. adj. [from clamm.] Viscous; glutinous; tenacious; adhesive; ropy.

Bodies clammy and cleaving, have an appetite, at once, to follow another body, and to hold to themselves. Bacon.

Neither the brain nor spirits can conserve motion: the former is of such a clammy consistence, it can no more retain it than a quagmire. Glanville's Sceptis.

Aghast he wak'd, and, starting from his bed,
Cold sweats, in clammy drops, his limbs o'erspread. Dryden.

Joyful thou'lt see

The clammy surface all o'erstrown with tribes

Of greedy insects. Philips.

There is an unctuous clammy vapour that arises from the stem of grapes, when they lie mashed together in the vat, which puts out a light when dipped into it. Addison on Italy.

The continuance of the fever, clammy sweats, paleness, and at last a total cessation of pain, are signs of a gangrene and approaching death. Arbutnot on Diet.

CLAMOROUS. adj. [from clamour.] Vociferous;
noisy; turbulent; loud.

It is no sufficient argument to say, that, in urging these ceremonies, none are so clamorous as Papists, and they whom Papists suborn. Hooker.

He kiss'd her lips

With such a clamorous smack, that at the parting

All the church echo'd. Shakespeare.

At my birth

The goats ran from the mountains, and the herds

Were strangely clam'rous in the frighted fields. Shakespeare.

With the clam'rous report of war,

Thus will I drown your exclamations. Shakespeare.

Then various elements against thee join'd,

In one more various animal combin'd,

And fram'd the clam'rous race of busy human kind. Pope.

A pamphlet that will settle the wavering, infract the ignorant, and inflame the clamorous. Swift.

CLAMOUR. n. f. [clamor, Latin.]

1. Outcry; noise; exclamations; vociferation.

Revoke thy doom,

Or whilst I can vent clamour from my throat,

I'll tell thee, thou do'st evil. Shakespeare.

The people grew then exorbitant in their cla-

The maid

Shall weep the fury of my love decay'd;

And weeping follow me, as thou do'st now,

With idle clamours of a broken vow. Prior.

2. It is used sometimes, but less fitly, of inanimate things.

Here the loud Arno's boist'rous clamours cease,
That with submissive murmurs glides in peace. Addison.

CLE

1. Transparency; brightness.
It may be, percolation doth not only cause clearness and splendour, but sweetness of flavour.

Bacon's Natural History.

Glass in the furnace grows to a greater magnitude, and refines to a greater clearness, only as the breath within is more powerful, and the heat more intense.

Bacon.

2. Splendour; lustre.

Love, more clear than yourself, with the clearness, lays a night of sorrow upon me.

Sidney.

3. Distinctness; perspicuity.

If he chances to think right, he does not know how to convey his thoughts to another with clearness and perspicuity.

Addison's Spectator.

4. Sincerity; honesty; plain dealing.

When the case required dissimulation, if they used it, the former opinion spread abroad of their good faith and clearness of dealing, made them almost invisible.

Bacon.

5. Freedom from imputation.

I require a clearness. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
CLEAR-SIGHTED, adj. [clear and sight.] Perspicuous; discerning; judicious.

Clear-sighted reason, wisdom's judgment leads;
And sense, her vassal, in her footsteps treads.

Denham.

To CLEARSTARCH, v. a. [from clear and starch.]
To stiffen with starch.

He took his present lodging at the mansion-house of a taylor's widow, who washes, and can clearstarch his bands.

Addison.

To CLEAVE, v. n. pret. I cleave. [cleopan, Sax.
klēvan, Dutch.]

1. To adhere; to stick; to hold to.

The clarifying of liquours by adhesion, is effected when some cleaving body is mixed with the liquours, whereby the grosser part sticks to that cleaving body.

Bacon's Natural History.

Water, in small quantity, cleaveth to any thing that is solid.

Bacon's Natural History.

When the dust groweth into hardness, and the clouds cleave fast together.

Job.

The thin camelion, fed with air, receives
The colour of the thing to which he cleaves.

Dryden.

2. To unite aptly; to fit.

New honours come upon him,
Like our strange garments, cleave not to their mould,

Shakespeare.

3. To unite in concord and interest; to adhere.

The apostles did conform the Christians, according to the pattern of the Jews, and made them cleave the better.

Hooker.

The men of Judah cleave unto their king.

Samuel.

If you shall cleave to my consent, when 'tis,
It shall make honour for you.

Shakespeare.

The people would revolt, if they saw any of the French nation to cleave unto.

Knox's History of the Turks.

4. To be concomitant to; to be united with.

We cannot imagine, that, in breeding or beget-ting faith, his grace doth cleave to the one, and forsake the other.

Hooker.

To CLEAVE, v. a. pret. I cleave, I cleave, I cleft; part. pass. cleaven, or cleft. [cleopan, Sax.
klēvan, Dutch.]

1. To divide with violence; to split; to part forcibly into pieces.

And at their passing cleave th' Assyrian flood.

Milton.

The fountains of it are said to have been cloven, or burst open.

Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

The blessed minister his wings display'd,
And, like a shooting star, he cleft the night.

Dryden.

Rais'd on her dusky wings, she cleaves the skies.

Dryden.

Whom with such force he struck, he fell'd him down,

And cleft the circle of his golden crown.

Dryden.

Or had the sun
Wrest'd to the earth a nearer seat,
His beams had cleft the hill, the valley dry'd.

Blackmore.

CLE

Where whole brigades one champion's arms
o'erthrow,

And cleave a giant at a random blow. Tickell.
Not half so sweet the trembling doves can fly.

When the fierce eagle cleaves the liquid sky. Pope.
2. To divide; to part naturally.

And every beast that parteth the hoof, and cleaveth the cleft into two claws.

Deut.

To CLEAVE, v. n.

1. To part afunder.

Wars twixt you twain would be
As if the world should cleave, and that slain men Should folder up the rift.

Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleop.

The ground cleave afunder that was under them.

Numbers.

He cut the cleaving sky,
And in a moment vanish'd from her eye.

Pope's Odyssey.

2. To suffer division.

It cleaves with a glossy polite substance, not plane, but with some little unevenness.

Newton's Opt.

A CLEAVER, n. f. [from cleave.]

1. A butcher's instrument to cut animals into joints.

You, gentlemen, keep a parcel of roaring bullies about me day and night, with huzzas and hunting-horns, and ringing the changes on butchers cleavers.

Abbot.

Though arm'd with all thy cleavers, knives,
And axes made to hew down lives.

Hudibras.

2. A weed. Improperly written CLIVER.

CLEES, n. f. The two parts of the foot of beasts which are cloven-footed.

Skinner. It is a country word, and probably corrupted from claws.

CLEF, n. f. [from cleft, key, Fr.] In music, a mark at the beginning of the lines of a song, which shews the tone or key in which the piece is to begin.

Chambers.

CLEFT, part. pass. [from cleave.] Divided; parted afunder.

Fat, with incense strew'd,
On the cleft wood.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

I never did on cleft Parnassus dream,
Nor taste the sacred Heliconian stream.

Dryden.

CLEFT, n. f. [from cleave.]

1. A space made by the separation of parts; a crack; a crevice.

The cascades seem to break through the clefts and cracks of rocks.

Addison's Guardian.

The extremity of this cape has a long cleft in it,
which was enlarged and cut into shape by Agrippa, who made this the great port for the Roman fleet.

Addison on Italy.

The rest of it, being more gross and ponderous,
does not move far; but lodges in the clefts, craggs,
and sides of the rocks, near the bottoms of them.

Woodward.

2. In farriery.

Clefts appear on the bought of the pasterns, and are caused by a sharp and malignant humour, which frets the skin; and it is accompanied with pain, and a noisome stench.

Farrer's Dict.

His horse it is the herald's west;
No, 'tis a mare, and hath a cleft.

Ben Jonson.

To CLEFTGRAFT, v. a. [cleft and graft.] To engraft by cleaving the stock of a tree, and inserting a branch.

Fibers may be cleft-grafted on the common nut.

Mortimer.

CLEMENCY, n. f. [clemence, Fr. clementia, Lat.]

1. Mercy; remission of severity; willingness to spare; tenderness in punishing.

I have stated the true notion of clemency, mercy, compassion, good-nature, humanity, or whatever else it may be called, so far as is consistent with wisdom.

Addison.

2. Mildness; softness.

Then in the clemency of upward air,
We'll scour our spots, and the dire thunder fear.

Dryden.

CLEMENT, adj. [clement, Latin.] Mild; gentle; merciful; kind; tender; compassionate.

You are more clement than vile men,
Who of their broken debtors take a third,
Letting them thrive again on the abatement.

Shakespeare.

CLE

CLENCH. See CLINCH.

To CLEPE, v. a. [clypian, Saxon.] To call.
Obsolete.

Three crabbed months had fow'd themselves to death,

Ere I could make thee open thy white hand,
And clepe thyself my love.

Shakespeare.

CLERGY, n. f. [clergē, Fr. clerus, Lat. clerus, Greek.] The body of men set apart by due ordination for the service of God.

We hold that God's clergy are a state which hath been, and will be as long as there is a church upon earth, necessary, by the plain word of God himself;
a state whereunto the rest of God's people must be subject, as touching things that appertain to their soul's health.

Hooker.

The convocation give a greater sum,
Than ever, at one time, the clergy yet
Did to his predecessors part withal.

Shakespeare.

CLERGYMAN, n. f. [clergy and man.] A man in holy orders; a man set apart for ministration of holy things; not a laick.

How I have sped among the clergymen,
The sums I have collected shall express.

Shakespeare.

It seems to be in the power of a reasonable clergyman to make the most ignorant man comprehend his duty.

Swift.

CLERICAL, adj. [clericus, Lat.] Relating to the clergy; as, a clerical man; a man in orders.

In clericals the keys are lined, and in colleges
they use to line the table-men.

Bacon's Natural History.

Unless we may more properly read clericalists.

A CLERK, n. f. [clericus, Sax. clericus, Lat.]

1. A clergyman.

All persons were stiled clerks that served in the church of Christ, whether they were bishops, priests, or deacons.

Aylmer.

2. A scholar; a man of letters.

They might talk of book-learning what they would; but, for his part, he never saw more un-featy fellows than great clerks were.

Sidney.

The greatest clerks being not always the honest-est, any more than the wisest men.

South.

3. A man employed under another as a writer.

My lord Bassanio gave his ring away
Unto the judge; and then the boy, his clerk,
That took some pains in writing, he begg'd mine.

Shakespeare.

My friend was in doubt whether he should not exert the justice upon such a vagrant; but not having his clerk with him, who is a necessary counsellor, he let the thought drop.

Addison.

4. A petty writer in publick offices: an officer of various kinds.

Take a just view, how many may remark
Who's now a lord, his grand-fire was a clerk.

Shakespeare.

It may seem difficult to make out the bills of fare for the suppers of Vitellius. I question not but an expert clerk of a kitchen can do it.

Abbot.

5. The layman who reads the responses to the congregation in the church, to direct the rest.

CLERKSHIP, n. f. [from clerk.]

1. Scholarship.

2. The office of a clerk of any kind.

He sold the clerkship of his parish, when it became vacant.

Swift's Miscellanies.

CLEVE, } In composition, at the beginning or CLIF. } end of the proper name of a place, CLIVE. } denotes it to be situated on the side of a rock or hill; as Cleveland, Clifton, Slouchif.

CLEVER, adj. [of no certain etymology.]

1. Dextrous; skilful.

It was the cleverer mockery of the two

L'Estrange.

I read Dyer's letter more for the stile than the news. The man has a clever pen, it must be owned.

Addison's Freeholder.

2. Just; fit; proper; commodious.

I can't but think twould sound more clever,
To me, and to my heirs for ever.

Pope.

3. Well shaped; handsome.

She called him gundy-guts, and he called her louty.

Swift.

lowly Peg, tho' the girl was a tight clever wench as any was. Arbutnot.

4. This is a low word, scarcely ever used but in burlesque or conversation; and applied to any thing a man likes, without a fettered meaning.

CLEVERLY. adv. [from clever.] Dextrously; fitly; handsomely.

These would inveigle rats with th' scent, And sometimes catch them with a snap, As cleverly as th' ablest trap. Hudibras.

A rogue upon the highway may have as strong an arm, and take off a man's head as cleverly as the executioner. South.

CLEVERNESS. n. f. [from clever.] Dexterity; skill; accomplishment.

CLEW. n. f. [clýpe, Sax. klouwen, Dutch.] 1. Thread wound upon a bottom; a ball of thread.

Effusions untwisting his deceitful claw; He 'gan to weave a web of wicked guile. Spenser.

While guided by some claw of heav'nly thread, The pgrplex'd labyrinth we backward tread. Roscommon.

They see small claws draw vastest weights along, Not in their bulk but in their order strong. Dryd.

2. A guide; a direction: because men direct themselves by a claw of thread in a labyrinth.

This alphabet must be your own claw to guide you. Holder.

Is there no way, no thought, no beam of light? No claw to guide me thro' this gloomy maze, To clear my honour, yet preserve my faith? Smith.

The reader knows not how to transport his thoughts over to the next particular, for want of some claw, or connecting idea, to lay hold of. Watts's Logick.

3. CLEW of the sail of a Ship, is the lower corner of it, which reaches down to that earing where the tackles and sheets are fastened. Harris.

To CLEW. v. a. [from claw, a sea-term.]

To Clew the Sails, is to raise them, in order to be furl'd, which is done by a rope fastened to the claw of a sail, called the claw-garnet. Harris.

To CLICK. v. n. [cliken, Dut. cliqueter, French; or perhaps the diminutive of clack.] To make a sharp, small, successive noise.

The solemn death watch click'd, the hour she dy'd; And shrilling crickets in the chimney cry'd. Gay.

CLICKER. n. f. [from click.] A low word for the fervant of a saleman, who stands at the door to invite customers.

CLICKET. n. f. [from click.] The knocker of a door. Skinner.

CLIENT. n. f. [clíens, Latin.]

1. One who applies to an advocate for counsel and defence.

There is due from the judge to the advocate some commendation, where causes are well handled; for that upholds in the client the reputation of his counsel. Bacon's Essays.

Advocates must deal plainly with their clients, and tell the true state of their case. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

2. It may be perhaps sometimes used for a dependant in a more general sense, as it was used among the Romans.

I do think they are your friends and clients, And fearful to disturb you. Ben Jonson.

CLIENTED. particip. adj. [from client.] Supplied with clients.

This due occasion of discouragement, the worst conditioned and least cliented petivoguers, do yet, under the sweet bait of revenge, convert to a more plentiful prosecution of actions. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

CLIENTELE. n. f. [clíentela, Lat.] The condition or office of a client. A word scarcely used.

There's Varus holds good quarters with him; And, under the pretext of clientele, Will be admitted. Ben Jonson.

CLIENTSHIP. n. f. [from client.] The condition of a client.

Patronage and clientship among the Romans always defended: the plebeian houses had recourse to the patrician line which had formerly protected them. Dryden.

CLIFF. n. f. [clíous, Lat. clif, clíop, Saxom.]

1. A steep rock; a rock, according to Skinner, broken and craggy. [rupes.]

The Leucadians did use to precipitate a man from a high cliff into the sea. Bacon's Natural Hist.

Mountaineers, that from Severus came, And from the craggy cliffs of Tetrica. Dryden.

Where-ever 'tis to found scattered upon the shores, there is it as constantly found lodged in the cliffs thereabouts. Woodward.

2. The name of a character in music. Properly CLEF.

CLIFT. n. f. The same with CLIFF. Now disused.

Down he tumbled, like an aged tree, High growing on the top of rocky clift. Spenser.

CLIMACTER. n. f. [κλίμακτις.] A certain space of time, or progression of years, which is supposed to end in a critical and dangerous time.

Elder times, fitting their conceits upon climacter, differ from one another. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CLIMACTERICK. } adj. [from climacter.] Con-

CLIMACTERICAL. } taining a certain number of years, at the end of which some great change is supposed to befall the body.

Certain observable years are supposed to be attended with some considerable changes in the body; as the seventh year; the twenty-first, made up of three times seven; the forty-ninth, made up of seven times seven; the sixty-third, being nine times seven; and the eighty-first, which is nine times nine: which two last are called the grand climactericks.

The numbers seven and nine, multiplied into themselves, do make up sixty-three, commonly esteemed the great climacterical of our lives. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Your lordship being now arrived at your great climacterique, yet give no proof of the least decay of your excellent judgment and comprehension. Dryden.

My mother is something better, tho', at her advanced age, every day is a climacterick. Pope.

CLIMATE. n. f. [κλίμα,] 1. A space upon the surface of the earth, measured from the equator to the polar circles; in each of which spaces the longest day is half an hour longer than in that nearer to the equator. From the polar circles to the poles climates are measured by the increase of a month.

2. In the common and popular sense, a region, or tract of land, differing from another by the temperature of the air.

Between th' extremes, two happier climates hold The temper that partakes of hot and cold. Dryden.

On what new happy climate are we thrown? Dryden.

This talent of moving the passions cannot be of any great use in the northern climates. Swift.

To CLIMATE. v. n. To inhabit. A word only in Shakespeare.

The blessed gods Purge all infection from our air, whilst you Do climate here. Shakespeare.

CLIMATEURE. n. f. The same with CLIMATE. Not in use.

Such harbingers preceding still the fates, Have heav'n and earth together demonstrated Unto our climates and countrymen. Shakespeare.

CLIMAX. n. f. [κλίμαξ.] Gradation; ascent; a figure in rhetoric, by which the sentence rises gradually; as Cicero says to Catiline, Thou do'st nothing, movest nothing; thinkest nothing; but I hear it, I see it, and perfectly understand it.

Choice between one excellency and another is difficult; and yet the conclusion, by a due climax, is evermore the best. Dryden's Jew. Dedication.

Some radiant Richmond every age has grac'd, Still rising in a climax, till the last, Surpassing all, is not to be surpass'd. Granville.

To CLIMB. v. n. pret. clomb or climb'd; part clomb or climb'd. It is pronounced like clim. [clim-man, Sax. klíman, Dutch.] To ascend up any place; to mount by means of some hold or footing. It implies labour and difficulty, and successive efforts.

You tempt the fury of my three attendants, Lean famine, quartering steel, and climbing fire. Shakespeare.

When shall I come to th' top of that same hill? — You do climb up it now. Look, how we labour. Shakespeare.

Jonathan climb'd up upon his hands, and upon his feet. 1 Sam.

As a thief Into the window climbs, or o'er the tiles, So climb the first grand thief into God's fold. Milton.

Thou, fun! of this great world both eye and soul, Acknowledge him thy greater; found his praise In thy eternal course, both when thou climb'st, And when high noon hath gain'd, and when thou fall'st. Milton's Paradise Lost.

No rebel Titan's sacrilegious crime, By heaping hills on hills, can thither climb. Roscommon.

Black vapours climb aloft, and cloud the day. Dryden.

What controuling cause Makes waters, in contempt of nature's laws, Climb up, and gain th' aspiring mountain's height? Blackmore.

To CLIMB. v. a. To ascend; to mount. Is't not enough to break into my garden, Climbing my walls, in spite of me the owner? Shakespeare.

Thy arms pursue Paths of renown, and climb ascents of fame. Prior.

Forlorn he must, and persecuted fly; Climb the steep mountain, in the cavern lie. Prior.

CLIMBER. n. f. [from climb.] 1. One that mounts or scales any place or thing; a mounter; a rifer.

I wait not at the lawyer's gates, Ne shoulder climbers down the stairs. Carver's Survey.

Lowliness is young ambition's ladder, Whereto the climber upward turns his face. Shakespeare.

2. A plant that creeps upon other supports. Ivy, briony, honey-suckles, and other climbers must be dug up. Mortimer.

3. The name of a particular herb. The seeds are gathered into a little head, ending in a kind of rough plume; whence it is called by the country people old man's beard. Miller.

To CLIMBER. v. n. [from climber.] To mount with effort; to climb. In scaling the youngest to pluck off his becke, Beware how ye clim for breaking your neck. Tusser.

CLIME. n. f. [contracted from climate, and therefore properly poetical.] Climate; region; tract of earth. He can spread thy name o'er land and seas, Whatever clime the sun's bright circle warms. Milton.

They apply the celestial description of other climes unto their own. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Of beauty sing, her shining progress view, From clime to clime the dazzling light pursue. Graville.

Health to vigorous bodies, or fruitful seasons, in temperate climes, are common and familiar blessings. Atterbury.

To CLINCH. v. a. [clíniga, Sax. to knock, Janus. Clings, in Festu, to encompass, Mishew.] 1. To hold in the hand with the fingers bent over it. Simois rowls the hodies and the shields Of heroes, whose dismember'd hands yet bear The dart aloft, and clinch the pointed spear. Dryd.

2. To contract or double the fingers. Their tallest trees are about seven feet high, the tops whereof I could but just reach with my fist clinch'd. Swift.

3. To bend the point of a nail to the other side. 4. To confirm; to fix: as, to clinch an argument. CLINCH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A steep rock; a rock, according to Skinner, broken and craggy. [rupes.]

The Leucadians did use to precipitate a man from a high cliff into the sea. Bacon's Natural Hist.

Mountaineers, that from Severus came, And from the craggy cliffs of Tetrica. Dryden.

Thou, fun! of this great world both eye and soul, Acknowledge him thy greater; found his praise In thy eternal course, both when thou climb'st, And when high noon hath gain'd, and when thou fall'st. Milton's Paradise Lost.

No rebel Titan's sacrilegious crime, By heaping hills on hills, can thither climb. Roscommon.

Black vapours climb aloft, and cloud the day. Dryden.

What controuling cause Makes waters, in contempt of nature's laws, Climb up, and gain th' aspiring mountain's height? Blackmore.

To CLIMB. v. a. To ascend; to mount. Is't not enough to break into my garden, Climbing my walls, in spite of me the owner? Shakespeare.

Thy arms pursue Paths of renown, and climb ascents of fame. Prior.

Forlorn he must, and persecuted fly; Climb the steep mountain, in the cavern lie. Prior.

CLIMBER. n. f. [from climb.] 1. One that mounts or scales any place or thing; a mounter; a rifer.

I wait not at the lawyer's gates, Ne shoulder climbers down the stairs. Carver's Survey.

Lowliness is young ambition's ladder, Whereto the climber upward turns his face. Shakespeare.

2. A plant that creeps upon other supports. Ivy, briony, honey-suckles, and other climbers must be dug up. Mortimer.

3. The name of a particular herb. The seeds are gathered into a little head, ending in a kind of rough plume; whence it is called by the country people old man's beard. Miller.

To CLIMBER. v. n. [from climber.] To mount with effort; to climb. In scaling the youngest to pluck off his becke, Beware how ye clim for breaking your neck. Tusser.

CLIME. n. f. [contracted from climate, and therefore properly poetical.] Climate; region; tract of earth. He can spread thy name o'er land and seas, Whatever clime the sun's bright circle warms. Milton.

They apply the celestial description of other climes unto their own. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Of beauty sing, her shining progress view, From clime to clime the dazzling light pursue. Graville.

Health to vigorous bodies, or fruitful seasons, in temperate climes, are common and familiar blessings. Atterbury.

To CLINCH. v. a. [clíniga, Sax. to knock, Janus. Clings, in Festu, to encompass, Mishew.] 1. To hold in the hand with the fingers bent over it. Simois rowls the hodies and the shields Of heroes, whose dismember'd hands yet bear The dart aloft, and clinch the pointed spear. Dryd.

2. To contract or double the fingers. Their tallest trees are about seven feet high, the tops whereof I could but just reach with my fist clinch'd. Swift.

3. To bend the point of a nail to the other side. 4. To confirm; to fix: as, to clinch an argument. CLINCH. n. f. [from the verb.]

CLI

1. A word used in a double meaning; a pun; an ambiguity; a duplicity of meaning, with an identity of expression. How it obtains this meaning is difficult to find. A nail caught on the other side, and doubled, is a nail clinched: a word taken in a different meaning, and doubled in sense, is likewise a clinch.

Such as they are, I hope they will prove, without a clinch, luciferous; searching after the nature of light.

Pure clinches the suburban muse affords,
And Panton waging harmless war with words.

Here one poor word a hundred clinches makes.

2. That part of the cable which is fastened to the ring of the anchor.

CLINCHER. n. f. [from clinch.] A cramp; a holdfast; a piece of iron bent down to fasten planks.

The wimbles for the work, Calypso found;
With those he pierc'd 'em, and with clinchers bound.

CLING. v. n. pret. I clung; part. I have clung. [kynger, Danish.]

1. To hang upon by twining round; to stick to; to hold fast upon.

The broil long doubtful stood;
As two spent swimmers that do cling together,
And choke their art.
The fontanel in his neck was defcried by the the clinging of his hair to the plaister.

When they united, and together clung,
When undistinguish'd in one heap they hung.

See in the circle, next Eliza plac'd,
Two babes of love, close clinging to her waist.

That they may the closer cling,
Take your blue ribbon for a string.

2. To adhere as followers, or friends.

Most popular conful he is grown, methinks:
How the rout cling to him! Ben Jonson's Catiline.

3. To dry up; to consume; to waste; to pine away. [Leclungen æneop, a withered tree.]

Upon the next tree shalt thou hang alive,
'Till famine cling thee.

CLINGY. adj. [from cling.] Apt to cling; adhefive.

CLINICAL. adj. [κλινικα, to lie down.] Those CLINICK. } that keep their beds; those that are sick, past hopes of recovery.

A clinical lecture is a discourse upon a disease, made by the bed of the patient.

A clinical convert, one that is converted on his death-bed. This word occurs often in the works of Taylor.

CLINK. v. a. [perhaps softened from clank, or corrupted from clink.] To strike so as to make a small sharp noise.

Five years! a long lease for the clinking of pewter.

CLINK. v. n. To utter a small, sharp, interrupted noise.

The fever'd bars,
Submissive, clink against your brazen portals.

Underneath th' umbrella's oily shed,
Safe thro' the wet on clinking patterns tread.

CLINK. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A sharp successive noise; a knocking.

I heard the clink and fall of swords.

2. It seems in Spenser to have some unusual sense, I believe the knocker of a door.

Tho' creeping close, behind the wicket's clink,
Privily he peeped out thro' a chink.

CLINGUANT. adj. [Fr.] Dressed in embroidery, in spangles, false glitter, tinsel finery.

To-day the French,
All clinguant, all in gold, like heathen gods,
Shone down the English.

CLIP. v. a. [clippan, Sax.]

1. To embrace, by throwing the arms round; to hug; to enfold in the arms.

He, that before shunn'd her, to shun such harms,
Now runs and takes her in his clipping arms.

Here I clip
The anvil of my sword, and do content
Hotly, and nobly, with thy love.

O nation, that thou couldst remove!
That Neptune's arms, who clipper thee about.

Enter the city, clip your wives; your friends,
Tell them your feats.

The jades
That drag the tragick melancholy night,
Who with their drowy, slow, and flagging wings,

Clip dead mens graves.

The male retteth on the back of the female, clipping and embracing her with his legs about the neck and body.

2. To cut with sheers. [Klipper, Danish; kloppen, Dutch; apparently from the same radical sense, since sheers cut by inclosing and embracing.]

Your sheers come too late to clip the bird's wings, that already is flown away.

Then let him, that my love shall blame,
Or clip love's wings, or quench love's flame.

He clips hope's wings, whose airy blifs
Much higher than fruition is.

But love had clipp'd his wings, and cut him short,
Confin'd within the purlieus of his court.

If mankind had had wings, as perhaps some extravagant atheists may think us deficient in that, all the world must have consented to clip them.

By this lock, this sacred lock, I swear,
Which never more shall join its parted hair,
Clipp'd from the lovely head, where late it grew.

He spent every day ten hours dozing, clipping papers, or darning his stockings.

3. Sometimes with off.

We should then have as much feeling upon the clipping off a hair, as the cutting of a nerve.

4. It is particularly used of those who diminish coin, by paring the edges.

This design of new coinage, is just of the nature of clipping.

5. To curtail; to cut short.

All my reports go with the modest truth,
Nor more, nor clip, but so.

Mrs. Mayore's clipp'd the king's English.

Even in London, they clip their words after one manner about the court, another in the city, and a third in the suburbs.

6. To confine; to hold; to contain.

Where is he living, clip in with the sea,
Who calls me pupil?

CLIP. v. n. A phrase in falconry.

Some falcon stoops at what her eye design'd,
And with her eagerness the quarry mis'd,

Streight flies at check, and clips it down the wind.

CLIPPER. n. f. [from clip.] One that debases coin by cutting.

It is no English treason to cut
French crowns, and to-morrow the king
Himself will be a clipper.

No coins pleased some medallists more than those which had passed through the hands of an old Roman clipper.

CLIPPING. n. f. [from clip.] The part cut or clipped off.

Beings purely material, without sense or thought, as the clippings of our beards, and parings of our nails.

CLIVER. n. f. An herb. More properly written clavon.

It grows wild, the seeds sticking to the clothes of such as pass by them. It is sometimes used in medicine.

A CLOAK. n. f. [lach, Saxon.]

CLO

1. The outer garment, with which the rest are covered.

You may bear it,
Under a cloak that is of my length.

Their clothes were cloath of silver, mix'd with gold.

All arguments will be as little able to prevail, as the wind did with the traveller to part with his cloak, which he held only the faster.

Nimble he rose, and cast his garment down;
That instant in his cloak I wrapt me round.

2. A concealment; a cover.

Not using your liberty for a cloak of maliciousness.

To CLOAK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with a cloak.

Most heavenly fair, in deed and view,
She by creation was, 'till she did fall;

Thenceforth the fought for helps to cloak her crimes withal.

CLOAKBAG. n. f. [from cloak and bag.] A portmanteau; a bag in which clothes are carried.

Why do'st thou converse with that trunk of humours, that stuffed clockbag of guts?

I have already fit
(Tis in my cloakbag) doublet, hat, hose, all
That answer to them.

CLOCK. n. f. [clerc, Welsh, from clack, a bell, Welsh and Armorick; clocks, French.]

1. The instrument which, by a series of mechanical movements, tells the hour by a stroke upon a bell.

If a man be in sickness or pain, the time will seem longer without a clock or hour-glass than with it.

The picture of Jerome usually described at his study, is with a clock hanging by.

I told the clocks, and watch'd the waiting light.

2. It is an usual expression to say, What is it of the clock, for What hour is it? Or ten o'clock, for the tenth hour.

This inequality has been diligently observed by several of our ingenious clockmakers; and equations been made and used by them.

CLOCKWORK. n. f. [clock and work.] Movements by weights or springs, like those of a clock.

So if unprejudic'd you scan
The goings of this clockwork, man;
You find a hundred movements made
By fine devices in his head:

But 'tis the stomach's solid stroke,
That tells this being, what's o'clock.

Within this hollow was Vulcan's shop, full of fire and clock-work.

You look like a puppet moved by clockwork.

CLOD. n. f. [club, Sax. a little hillock; klotte, Dutch.]

1. A lump of earth or clay; such a body of earth as cleaves or hangs together.

The earth that casteth up from the plough a great clod, is not so good as that which casteth up a smaller clod.

I'll cut up, as plows
Do barren lands, and strike together flints
And clods; th' ungrateful senate and the people.

CLINK. n. f. [clink, Sax.]

CLINK. n. f. [clink, Sax.]

CLINK. n. f. [clink, Sax.]

to life and flight. Carew.

4. A lump; a mass of metal.
One at the forge
Labouring, two massy clods of iron and brass
Had melted. Milton.
5. Any thing vile, base, and earthy; as the body of man, compared to his soul.

And ye high heavens, the temple of the gods,

In which a thousand torches, flaming bright,
Do burn, that to us, wretched earthly clods,
In dreadful darkness lend desired light. Spenser.

The spirit of man,
Which God inspir'd, cannot together perish
With this corporeal clod. Milton's Paradise Lost.
How the purer spirit is united to this clod, is a knot too hard for our degraded intellects to untie.
Glanville.

In moral reflections there must be heat as well as dry reason, to inspire this cold clod of clay, which we carry about with us. Burnet's Theory.

6. A dull, gross, stupid fellow; a dolt.
The vulgar! a scarce animated clod,
Ne'er pleas'd with aught above 'em. Dryden.
To CLOD. v. n. [from the noun.] To gather into concretions; to coagulate: for this we sometimes use clod.

Let us go find the body, and from the stream,
With lavers pure, and cleansing herbs, wash off
The clotted gore. Milton.

To CLOD. v. a. [from the noun.] To pelt with clods.

CLODDY. adj. [from clod.]

1. A fellow helper; an assistant; an associate; one engaged in the assistance of another.

I should not succeed in a project, whereof I have had no hint from my predecessors the poets, or their seconds or coadjutors the critics. Dryden.

Away the friendly coadjutor flies. Garth's Disp.

A gownman of a different make, Whom Pallas, once Vanessa's tutor, Had fix'd on for her coadjutor. Swift.

2. [In the cannon law.] One who is empowered or appointed to perform the duties of another.

A bishop that is unprofitable to his diocese ought to be deposed, and no coadjutor assigned him. Ayliffe.

COADJUVANCY. n. f. [from con and adjuvo, Lat.] Help; concurrent help; contribution of help; co-operation.

Crystal is a mineral body, in the difference of stones, made of a lentous percolation of earth, drawn from the most pure and limpid juice thereof, owing to the coldness of the earth some concurrence, and coadjuvancy, but not immediate determination and efficiency. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

COADUNITIO. n. f. [from con, ad, unitio, Lat.] The conjunction of different substances into one mass.

Bodies seem to have an intrinsic principle of, or corruption from, the coadunion of particles endued with contrary qualities. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

To COAGMENT. v. a. [from con and agmen, Lat.] To congregate or heap together. I have only found the participle in use.

Had the world been coagmented from that supposed fortuitous jumble, this hypothesis had been tolerable. Glanville.

COAGMENTATION. n. f. [from coagment.] Collection, or coaggregation into one mass; union; conjunction.

The third part rests in the well joining, cementing, and coagmentation of words, when it is smooth, gentle, and sweet. Ben Jonson.

COAGULABLE. adj. [from coagulate.] That which is capable of concretion.

Stones that are rich in vitriol, being often drenched with rain-water, the liquor will then extract a fine and transparent substance, coagulable into vitriol. Boyle.

To COAGULATE. v. a. [coagulo, Lat.] To force into concretions; as, by the affusion of some other substance, to turn milk.

Roasted in wrath and fire, And thus coerz'd with coagulate gore. Shakespeare.

Vivification ever consisteth in spirits attenuate, which the cold doth congeal and coagulate. Bacon's Natural History.

Bitumen is found in lumps, or coagulated masses, in some springs. Woodward's Natural History.

The milk in the stomach of calves, which is coagulated by the rennet, is again dissolved and rendered fluid by the gall in the duodenum. Arbutnot.

To COAGULATE. v. n. To run into concretions, or conglations.

Spirit of wine commixed with milk, a third part spirit of wine, and two parts milk, coagulate little, but mingleth; and the spirit swims not above. Bacon.

About the third part of the oil olive, which was driven over into the receiver, did there coagulate into a whitish body, almost like butter. Boyle.

COAGULATION. n. f. [from coagulate.]

1. Concretion; congelation; the act of coagulating; the state of being coagulated.

2. The body formed by coagulation.

As the substance of coagulations is not merely saline, nothing dissolves them but what penetrates and relaxes at the same time. Arbutnot.

COAGULATIVE. adj. [from coagulate.] That which has the power of causing concretion, or coagulation.

To manifest the coagulative power, we have sometimes in a minute arrested the fluidity of new milk, and turned it into a curdled substance, only by dexterously mingling with it a few drops of good oil of vitriol. Boyle.

COAGULATOR. n. f. [from coagulate.] That which causes coagulation.

Coagulators of the humours are, those things which expel the most fluid parts, as in the case of incrassating, or thickening; and by those things which suck up some of the fluid parts, as absorbents. Arbutnot.

COAL. n. f. [col, Sax. kol, Germ. kole, Dutch, kol, Danish.]

1. The common fossil fuel.

Coal is a black, sulphurous, inflammatory matter, dug out of the earth, serving for fuel, common in Europe, though the English coal is of most repute. One species of pit-coal is called cannel, or canole coal, which is found in the northern counties; hard, glossy and light, apt to cleave into thin flakes, and, when kindled, yields a continual blaze 'till it be burnt out. Chambers.

Coals are solid, dry, opaque, inflammable substances, found in large strata, splitting horizontally more easily than in any other direction; of a glossy hue, soft and friable, not fusible, but easily inflammable, and leaving a large residuum of ashes. Hill on Fossils.

But age, enforced, falls by her own consent; As coals to ashes, when the spirit's spent. Denham.

We shall meet with the same mineral lodged in coals, that elsewhere we found in marble. Woodward's Natural History.

2. The cinder of scorched wood; charcoal.

Whatsoever doth so alter a body, as it returneth not again to that it was, may be called alteration major; as when cheese is made of curds, or coals of wood, or bricks of earth. Bacon.

3. Fire; any thing inflamed or ignited.

You are no furer, no, Than is the coal of fire upon the ice, Or hailstones in the sun. Shakespeare.

You have blown this coal betwixt my lord and me. Shakespeare.

The rage of jealousy then fir'd his soul, And his face kindled like a burning coal. Dry.

To COAL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To burn wood to charcoal.

Add the tinner's care and cost, in buying the wood for this service, felling, framing, and piling it to be burnt; in fetching the same when it is coaled, through such far, foul, and cumbersome ways. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

Charcoal of roots, coaled into great pieces, lasts longer than ordinary charcoal. Bacon.

2. To delineate with a coal.

Marvailing, he coaled out rhymes upon the wall, near to the picture. Camden.

COAL-BLACK. adj. [coal and black.] Black in the highest degree; of the colour of a coal.

As burning Etna, from his boiling stew, Doth belch out flames, and rocks in pieces broke, And ragged ribs of mountains molten new, Enwrap in coal-black clouds and filthy smog. Fairy Queen.

Ethiopians and negroes become coal-black from fuliginous effluencies, and complexional tinctures. Brown.

Coal-black his colour, but like jet it shone; His legs and flowing tail were white alone. Dry.

COAL-BOX. n. f. [coal and box.] A box to carry coals to the fire.

Leave a pail of dirty water, a coal-box, a bottle, a broom, and such other unsightly things. Swift.

COAL-FISH. n. f. [aselus niger.] A species of beardless gadus.

COAL-MINE. n. f. [coal and mine.] A mine in which coals are dug; a coal-pit.

Springs injure land, that flow from coal mines. Mortimer.

COAL-PIT. n. f. [from coal and pit.] A pit made in the earth, generally to a great depth, for digging coals.

A leaf of the polypody kind, found in the sinking of a coal-pit. Woodward.

COAL-STONE. n. f. [coal and stone.] A sort of cannel coal. See COAL.

Coal-stone flames easily, and burns freely; but holds and endures the fire much longer than coal. Woodward.

COAL-WORK. n. f. [coal and work.] A coalery; a place where coals are found.

There is a vast treasure in the old English, from whence authors may draw constant supplies; as our officers make their surest remits from the coal-works and the mines. Fulton.

COALERY. n. f. [from coal.] A place where coals are dug.

Two fine stalactites were found hanging from a black black stone, at a deserted vault in Benwell coalery. Woodward.

To COALE/SCE. v. n. [coaleſco, Latin.]
1. To unite in masses by a spontaneous approximation to each other.

When vapours are raised, they hinder not the transparency of the air, being divided into parts too small to cause any reflection in their superfi-cies; but when they begin to coaleſce, and constitute globules, those globules become of a convenient size to reflect some colours. Newton.

2. To grow together; to join.
COALE/SCENCE. n. f. [from coaleſce.] The act of coaleſcing; concretion; union.

COALITION. n. f. [from coaleſco, coalitum, Lat.]
Union in one mass or body; conjunction of separate parts in one whole.

The world's a mass of heterogeneous consistencies, and every part thereof a coalition of distinguishable varieties. Glanville.

In the first coalition of a people, their prospect is not great: they provide laws for their present exigence. Hale.

'Tis necessary that these squandered atoms should convene and unite into great masses: without such a coalition the chaos must have reigned to all eternity. Bentley.

COALV. adj. [from coal.] Containing coal.
Or coaly Time, or ancient hallow'd Dee. Milton.

COAPTATION. n. f. [from con and apto, Lat.]
The adjustment of parts to each other.

In a clock the hand is moved upon the dial,
the bell is struck, and the other actions belonging to the engines are performed by virtue of the size, shape, bigness, and coaptation of the several parts.
Boyle.

The same method makes both prose and verse beautiful, which consists in the judicious coaptation and ranging of the words. Broome.

To COARCT. } v. a. [coarcto, Latin.]
To COARCTATE. }

1. To straighten; to confine into a narrow compass.

The wind finding the room in the form of a trunk, and coarctated therein, forced the stones of the window like pellets, clean through it. Bacon.

2. To contract power; to restrain.
If a man coarct's himself to the extremity of an act, he must blame and impute it to himself, that he has thus coarcted or straightened himself so far.
Ayliffe.

COARCTATION. n. f. [from coarcto.]
1. Confinement; restraint to a narrow space.

The greatest winds, if they have no coarctation, or blow not hollow, give an interior sound.

2. Contraction of any space.
Straighten the artery never so much, provided the sides of it do not meet, the vessel will continue to beat below, or beyond the coarctation. Ray.

3. Restraint of liberty.
Election is opposed not only to coaction, but also to coarctation, or determination to one. Bramhall.

COARSE. adj.
1. Not refined; not separated from impurities or baser parts.

I feel
Of what coarse metal ye are molded. Shakespeare.
2. Not soft or fine: used of cloth, of which the threads are large.

3. Rude; uncivil; rough of manners.

4. Gross; not delicate.
'Tis not the coarser tie of human law
That binds their peace. Thomson.

5. Inelegant; rude; unpolished.
Praise of Virgil is against myself, for presuming to copy, in my coarse English, his beautiful expressions. Dryden.

6. Not nicely expert; unfinished by art or education.

Practical rules may be useful to such as are remote from advice, and to coarse practitioners, which they are obliged to make use of. Arbutnot.

7. Mean; not nice; not elegant; vile.
Ill comfort, and a coarse perfume,
Disgrace the delicacy of a feast. Roscommon.

A coarse and useless dunghill weed,
Fix'd to one spot, to rot just as it grows. Orway.

From this coarse mixture of terrestrial parts,
Desire and fear by turns possess their hearts. Dryd.

COARSELY. adv. [from coarse.]
1. Without fineness; without refinement.

2. Meanly; not elegantly.
John came neither eating nor drinking, but fared coarsely and poorly, according to the apparel he wore. Brown.

3. Rudely; not civilly.
The good cannot be too much honoured, nor the bad too coarsely used. Dryden.

4. Inelegantly.
Be pleased to accept the rudiments of Virgil's poetry, coarsely translated; but which yet retains some beauties of the author. Dryden.

COARSENESS. n. f. [from coarse.]
1. Impurity; unrefined state.

First know the materials whereof the glass is made; then consider what the reason is of the coarseness or dearness. Bacon's Essays.

2. Roughness; want of fineness.

3. Grossness; want of delicacy.
Friends (pardon the coarseness of the illustration)
as dogs in couples, should be of the same size. L'Estrange.

4. Roughness; rudeness of manners.
A base wild olive he remains;
The shrub the coarseness of the clown retains. Garth.

5. Meanness; want of nicety.
Consider the penuriousness of the Hollanders, the coarseness of their food and raiment, and their little indulgences of pleasure. Addison on the War.

COAST. n. f. [coſte, Fr. costa, Latin.]

1. The edge or margin of the land next the sea; the shore. It is not used for the banks of less waters.

He sees in English ships the Holland coast. Dryden.

2. It seems to be taken by Newton for side, like the French coſte. It was likewise so used by Bacon.

The south-east is found to be better for ripening of trees than the south-west: though the south-west be the hottest coast. Bacon.

Some kind of virtue, lodged in some sides of the crystal, inclines and bends the rays towards the coast, of unusual refraction; otherwise the rays would not be refracted towards that coast rather than any other coast, both at their incidence and at their emergence, so as to emerge by a contrary situation of the coast. Newton's Opt.

3. The COAST is clear. A proverbial expression. The danger is over; the enemies have marched off.

Going out, and seeing that the coast was clear, Zelmane dismissed Mufidorus. Sidney.

The royal spy, when now the coast was clear,
Sought not the garden, but retir'd unseen. Dryden.

To COAST. v. n. [from the noun.] To sail close by the coast; to sail within sight of land.

But steer my vessel with a steady hand,
And coast along the shore in sight of land. Dryden's Virgil.

The ancients coasted only in their navigation, seldom taking the open sea. Arbutnot on Coins.

To COAST. v. a. To sail by; to sail near to.
Nearchus, the admiral of Alexander, not knowing the compass, was fain to coast the shore. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The greatest entertainment we found in coasting it, were the several prospects of woods, vineyards, meadows, and cornfields which lie on the borders of it. Addison on Italy.

COASTER. n. f. [from coast.] He that sails timorously near the shore.

In our small skiff we must not launch too far;
We here but coasters, not discoverers are. Dryden.

COAT. n. f. [cotte, Fr. cotta, Italian.]
1. The upper garment.
He was armed with a coat of mail, and the weight of the coat was five thousand shekels of brass. I Samuel.

The coat of many colours they brought to their father, and said, this have we found: know now whether it be thy son's coat or no. Genesis.

2. Petticoat; the habit of a boy in his infancy;
the lower part of a woman's dress.

A friend's younger son, a child in coats, was not easily brought to his book. Locke.

3. The habit or vesture, as demonstrative of the office.

For his intermeddling with arms, he is the more excusable, because many of his coat, in those times, are not only martial directors, but commanders, Howell's Vocal Forest.

Men of his coat should be minding their pray'rs,
And not among ladies to give themselves airs. Swift.

4. The hair or fur of a beast; the covering of any animal.

He clad
Their nakedness with skins of beasts: or slain,
Or, as the snake, with youthful coat repaid;
And thought not much to clothe his enemies. Milton.

Give your horse some powder of brimstone in his oats, and it will make his coat lie fine. Mortimer's Husbandry.

You have given us milk
In luscious streams, and lent us your own coat Against the winter's cold. Thomson's Spring.

5. Any tegument; tunick; or covering.
The eye is defended with four coats or skins. Peasam.

The optick nerves have their medullary parts terminating in the brain, their teguments terminating in the coats of the eye. Darham's Physico-Theology.

Amber is a nodule, invested with a coat, called rock-amber. Woodward on Fossils.

6. That on which the ensigns armorial are portrayed.

The herald of love's mighty king,
In whose coat armour richly are display'd
All sorts of flowers the which on earth do spring. Spenser.

Cropp'd are the flower de-luces in your arms;
Of England's coat one half is cut away. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

At each trumpet was a banner bound,
Which, waving in the wind, display'd at large
Their master's coat of arms and knightly charge. Dryden.

To COAT. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover;
to invest; to overspread: as, to coat a retort; to coat a ceiling.

To COAX. v. a. To wheedle; to flatter; to humour. A low word.

The nurse had changed her note; she was muzzling and coaxing the child; that's a good dear, says
she. L'Estrange.

I coax! I wheedle! I'm above it. Farquhar's Recruiting Officer.

COAXER. n. f. [from the verb.] A wheedler;
a flatterer.

COB. A word often used in the composition of low terms; corrupted from cop, Sax. kopf, Germ.
the head or top.

COB. n. f.
1. A sort of sea-fowl; called also sea-cob. Phillips.

2. In some provinces, and probably in old language, a spider; whence cobweb.

COBALT. n. f. A marcasite frequent in Saxony.

Cobalt is plentifully impregnated with arsenick;
contains copper and some silver. Being sublimed, the flores are of a blue colour: these German mineralists call zaffir. Woodward.

Cobalt is a dense, compact, and ponderous mineral, very bright and shining, and much resembling some of the antimonial ores. It is found in Germany, Saxony, Bohemia, and England; but ours is a poor kind. From cobalt are produced the three sorts of arsenick, white, yellow, and red; as also zaffre and smalt. Hill on Fossils.

To COBBLE. v. a. [kobler, Danish.]
1. To mend any thing coarsely: used generally of shoes.

If you be out, fir, I can mend you.—Why, fir, cobble you. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

They'll sit by th' fire, and presume to know
What's done i' th' capitol; making parties strong,
And feeble such as stand not in their liking,
Below their cobbled shoes. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Many underlayers, when they could not live upon their trade, have raised themselves from cobbling to fluxing. L'Estrange.

2. To do or make any thing clumsily, or unhandily.

Reject the nauseous praises of the times;
Give thy bafe poets back their cobbled rhimes.

Believe not that the whole universe is mere bungling and blundering, nothing effected for any purpose or design, but all ill-favourably cobbled and jumbled together. Bentley.

CO'BELLER. n. f. [from cobble.]
1. A mender of old shoes.

Not many years ago it happened that a cobbler had the casting vote for the life of a criminal.

2. A clumsy workman in general.

Truly, fir, in respect of a fine workman, I am but, as you would say, a cobbler.

3. In a kind of proverbial sence, any mean person.

Think you the great prerogative 't enjoy
Of doing ill, by virtue of that race;
As if what we esteem in cobblers bafe,
Would the high family of Brutus grace?

CO'BIRONS. n. f. [cob and iron.] Irons with a knob at the upper end.

The implements of the kitchen; as spits, ranges, cobirons and pots. Bacon's Phys. Rem.

CO'BISHOP. n. f. [cob and bishop.] A coadjutant bishop.

Valerius, advanced in years, and a Grecian by birth, not qualified to preach in the Latin tongue, made use of Austin as a cobishop, for the benefit of the church of Hippo. Ayliffe.

CO'BUT. n. f. [cob and nut.] A boy's game;
the conquering nut.

CO'BSWAN. n. f. [cob, head; and swan.] The head or leading swan.

I'm not taken
With a cobswan, or a high-mounting bull,
As foolish Leda and Europa were.

CO'BWER. n. f. [kopweb, Dutch.]

1. The web or net of a spider: from cob, a spider.

The luckless Clarion,
With violent swift flight, forth carried
Into the curfed cobweb, which his foe
Had framed for his final overthrow. Spenser.
Is supper ready, the house trimmed, rushes strewed, and cobwebs swept?

The spider in the house of a burgher, fell presently to her net-work of drawing cobwebs up and down. L'Estrange.

2. Any snare, or trap; implying insidiousness and weakness.

For he a rope of sand could twist,
As tough as learned Sorbonist;
And weave fine cobwebs fit for scull
That's empty, when the moon is full. Hudibras.
Chronology at best is but a cobweb law, and he broke through it with his weight. Dryden.
Laws are like cobwebs, which may catch small flies; but let wasps and hornets break through.

CO'COA. n. f. See CACAO.

COCCIFEROUS. adj. [from coccus, and fero, Lat.] All plants or trees are so called that have berries. Quincy.

CO'CHINEAL. n. f. [cocinilla, Span.] a woodlouse.]

An insect gathered upon the opuntia, and dried:
from which a beautiful red colour is extracted.

Hill.

CO'CHLEARY. adj. [from cochlea, Lat. a screw.]
Screwform; in the form of a screw.

That at St. Dennis, near Paris, hath wreathy spires, and cochleary turnings about it, which agreeth with the description of the unicorn's horn in Ælian. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CO'CHLEATED. adj. [from cochlea, Lat.] Of a screwed or turbinated form.

Two pieces of stone, struck forth of the cavity of the umbilici of shells, of the same fort with the foregoing: they are of a cochleated figure.

COCK. n. f. [cocc, Saxon; cog, French.]

1. The male to the hen; a domestick fowl, remarkable for his gallantry, pride, and courage.

Cocks have great combs and spurs; hens, little or none. Bacon's Natural History.

True cocks o' th' game,
That never ask for what, or whom, they fight;
But turn 'em out, and thew 'em but a foe,
Cry liberty, and that's a cause of quarrel. Dryd.

The careful hen
Calls all her chirping family around,
Fed and defended by the fearless cock.

2. The male of any small birds.

Calves and philosophers, tygers and statesmen, cock sparrows and coquets, exactly resemble one another in the formation of the pineal gland.

3. The weathercock, that shews the direction of the wind by turning.

You cataraets and hurricanoes spout,
'Till you have drench'd our steeples, drown'd the cocks!

4. A spout to let out water at will, by turning the stop. The handle had probably a cock on the top. Things that were contrived to turn seem anciently to have had that form, whatever was the reason.

When every room
Hath blaz'd with light, and bray'd with minstrelsy,
I have retir'd me to a watchful cock,
And set mine eyes at flow.

It were good there were a little cock made in the belly of the upper glass. Bacon's Natural History.
Thus the small jett, which hasty hands unlock,
Spirts in the gard'ners eyes who turns the cock.

5. The notch of an arrow.

6. The part or the lock of a gun that strikes with the flint. [From cocca, Ital. The notch of an arrow. Skinner. Perhaps from the action, like that of a cock pecking; but it was, I think, so called when it had not its present form.]

With hasty rage he snatch'd
His gunshot, that in holsters watch'd,
And bending cock, he levell'd full Against th' outside of Talgol's skull. Hudibras.
A seven-shot gun carries powder and bullets for seven charges and discharges. Under the breach of the barrel is one box for the powder; a little before the lock another for the bullets; behind the cock a charger, which carries the powder from the box to a funnel at the further end of the lock.

7. A conquerour; a leader; a governing man.

Sir Andrew is the cock of the club since he left us.

My schoolmaster call'd me a dunce and a fool;
But at cuffs I was always the cock of the school.

8. Cockcrowing; a note of the time in a morning.

We were carousing till the second cock. Shakesp.
He begins at curfew, and goes till the first cock.

9. A cockboat; a small boat.

They take view of all sized cocks, barges, and fisherboats hovering on the coast.

The fishermen that walk upon the beach,
Appear like mice; and yond tall anchoring bark,
Diminish'd to her cock; her cock, a buoy,

Almost too small for sight. Shakespeare.

10. A small heap of hay. [Properly cop.]

Shakespeare.

As soon as the dew is off the ground spread the hag again, and turn it, that it may wither on the other side: then handle it, and if you find it dry, make it up into cocks. Mortimer.

11. The form of a hat. [From the comb of the cock.]

You see many a smart rhetorician turning his hat in his hands, moulding it into several different cocks. Addison.

12. The style or gnomon of a dial. Chambers.

13. The needle of a balance.

14. Cock on the Hoop. Triumphant; exulting.

Now I am a frikker, all men on me look;
What should I do but set cock on the hoop?

You'll make a mutiny among my guests!
You will set cock a hoop!

For Hudibras, who thought h' had won
The field, as certain as certain as a gun,
And having routed the whole troop,
With victory was cock a hoop. Hudibras.

To Cock. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To set erect; to hold bolt upright, as a cock holds his head.

This is that muscle which performs the motion so often mentioned by the Latin poets, when they talk of a man's cocking his nose, or playing the rhinoceros. Addison.

Our Lightfoot barks, and cocks his ears;
O'er yonder stile see Lubberkin appears.

Dick would cock his nose in scorn,
But Tom was kind and loving. Swift.

2. To set up the hat with an air of petulance and pertness.

Dick, who thus long had passive sat,
Here strok'd his chin, and cock'd his hat. Prior.

An alert young fellow cock'd his hat upon a friend of his who entered. Addison's Spectator.

3. To mould the form of the hat.

4. To fix the cock of a gun ready for a discharge.

Some of them holding up their pistols cocked near the door of the house, which they kept open.

5. To raise hay in small heaps.

Sike mirth in May is meetest for to make,
Or summer shade, under the cocked hay.

To Cock. v. n.

1. To strut; to hold up the head, and look big, or menacing; or pert.

Sir Fopling is a fool so nicely writ,
The ladies would mistake him for a wit;

And when he sings, talks loud, and cocks, would cry,

I vow, methinks, he's pretty company. Dryden.

Every one cocks and struts upon it, and pretends to overlook us. Addison's Guardian.

2. To train or use fighting cocks.

Cries out 'gainst cocking since he cannot bet.

Cock, in composition, signifies small or little.

COCKADE. n. f. [from cock.] A ribband worn in the hat.

A COCKATRICE. n. f. [from cock and atzen, Sax. a serpent.] A serpent supposed to arise from a cock's egg.

They will kill one another by the look, like cockatrices. Shakespeare.

This was the end of this little cockatrice of a king, that was able to destroy those that did not espy him first.

This cockatrice is soonest crush'd in the shell;
but, if it grows, it turns to a serpent and a dragon.

My wife! 'tis she, the very cockatrice! Congreve.

COCKBOAT. n. f. [cock and boat.] A small boat belonging to a ship.

That invincible armada, which having not fired a cottage of ours at land, nor taking a cockboat of ours at sea, wandered through the wilderness of the northern seas.

Did they think it less dishonour to God to be like a brute, or a plant, or a cockboat, than to be like a man?

Stillingfleet.

Cock.

COCKBROTH. n. f. Broth made by boiling a cock.

Diet upon spoon-meats; as veal or cockbroths prepared with French barley. Harvey on Consumption.

COCKCROWING. n. f. [cock and crow.] The time at which cocks crow; the morning.

Ye know not when the master of the house cometh; at even, or at midnight, or at the cock-crowing, or in the morning. Mark.

To COCKER. v. a. [coqueliner, French.] To cade; to fondle; to indulge.

Most children's constitutions are spoiled by cock-ering and tendernefs. Locke on Education.

He that will give his son sugar-plums to make him learn, does but authorize his love of pleasure, and cocker up that propensity which he ought to subdue. Locke on Education.

Bred a fondling and an heirs;

Drest'd like any Lady May'refs,

Cocker'd by the servants round,

Was too good to touch the ground. Swift.

COCKER. n. f. [from cock.] One who follows the sport of cockfighting.

COCKEREL. n. f. [from cock.] A young cock.

Which of them first begins to crow?—

The old cock?—The cockerel. Shakespeare.

What wilt thou be, young cockerel, when thy spurs

Are grown to sharpnefs? Dryden.

COCKET. n. f. [Of uncertain derivation.]

A seal belonging to the king's customhouse; likewise a scroll of parchment, sealed and delivered by the officers of the customhouse to merchants, as a warrant that their merchandize is entered. Cowel.

The greatest profit did arise by the cocket of hides; for wool and woollens were ever of little value in this kingdom. Davis.

COCKFIGHT. n. f. [cock and fight.] A battle or match of cocks.

In cockfights, to make one cock more hardy, and the other more cowardly. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

At the seasons of football and cockfighting, these little republicks reassume their national hatred to each other. Addison.

Than are the tender horns of cockled snails. Shak.

COCKLOFT. n. f. [cock and loft.] The room over the garret, in which fowls are supposed to roost, unless it be rather corrupted from coploft, the cop or top of the house.

If the lowest floors already burn, Cocklofts and garrets soon will take their turn. Dryden's Juvenal.

My garrets, or rather my cocklofts indeed, are very indifferently furnished; but they are rooms to lay lumber in. Swift.

COCKMASTER. n. f. [cock and master.] One that breeds game cocks.

A cockmaster bought a partridge, and turned it among the fighting cocks. L'Estrange.

COCKMATCH. n. f. [cock and match.] Cockfight for a prize.

At the same time that the heads of parties preserve towards one another an outward shew of good breeding, their tools will not so much as mingle at a cockmatch. Addison.

Though quail-fighting is what is most taken notice of, they had doubtless cockmatches also. Arbutnot and Pope.

COCKNEY. n. f. [A word of which the original is much controverted. The French use an expression, Pais de cocaigne, for a country of dainties. Paris est pour un riche un Pais de cocaigne. Boileau. Of this word they are not able to fettle the original. It appears, whatever was its first ground, to be very antient, being mentioned in an old Norman-Saxon poem:]

Far in see by west Spaying,
Is a lond yhoce coayng.

On which Dr. Hickee has this remark:

Nunc coquin, coquine. Quæ olim apud Gallas otio, gula & ventri deditos, ignavum, ignavam, desidiosum, desidiosam, segnem significabant. Hinc urbanos utpote à rusticis laboribus ad vitam sedentariam, & desidiosam avocatos pagani nostri olim cockaignes, quod nunc scribitur cockneys, vocabant. Et poëta hic noster in monachos & moniales, ut segne genus hominum, qui desidie dediti, ventri indulgebant, & coquinæ amatores erant, malevolentissime invehitur, monasteria & monasticam vitam in descriptione terræ cockaignæ, parabolice perstringens.]

1. A native of London by way of contempt. So the cockney did to the eels, when she put them 't' th' pasty alive. Shakespeare. King Lear.

For who is such a cockney in his heart, Proud of the plenty of the southern part, To scorn that union by which we may Boast 'twas his countryman that writ this play? Dorset.

The cockney, travelling into the country, is surprized at many common practices of rural affairs. Watts.

2. Any effeminate, ignorant, low, mean, defpicable citizen.

I am afraid this great lubber, the world, will prove a cockney. Shakespeare. Twelfth Night.

COCKPIT. n. f. [cock and pit.]

COCKWEED. n. f. [from cock and weed.] The name of a plant, called also Dittander, or Pepperwort.

COCOA. n. f. [cacotat, Span. and therefore more properly written cacao.]

A species of palm-tree, cultivated in the East and West Indies. The bark of the nut is made into cordage, and the shell into drinking bowls. The kernel affords them a wholesome food, and the milk contained in the shell a cooling liquor. The leaves are used for thatching their houses, and are wrought into baskets. Miller.

The cacao or chocolate nut is a fruit of an oblong figure, is composed of a thin but hard and woody coat or skin, of a dark blackish colour; and of a dry kernel, filling up its whole cavity, fleshy, dry, firm, and fattish to the touch, of a dusky colour, an agreeable smell, and a pleasant and peculiar taste. It was unknown to us 'till the discovery of America. The tree is of the thickness of a man's leg, and but a few feet in height; its bark rough, and full of tubercles; and its leaves six or eight inches long, half as much in breadth, and pointed at the ends. The flowers are succeeded by the fruit, which is large and oblong, resembling a cucumber, five, six, or eight inches in length, and three or four in thickness, when fully ripe, of a purple colour. Within the cavity of this fruit are lodged the cocoa nuts, usually about thirty in number. Hill's Mat. Medica.

Amid' those orchards of the sun,
Give me to drain the cocoa's milky bowl,
And from the palm to draw its freshening wine. Thomson.

COCTILE. adj. [coctilis, Lat.] Made by baking, as a brick.

COCTION. n. f. [coctio, Lat.] The act of boiling.

Wou'd strut become a golden pippin. Swift.

COEFFICACY. n. f. [con and efficacia, Lat.] The power of several things acting together to produce an effect.

We cannot in general infer the efficacy of those stars, or cofficiency particular in medications.

COEFFICIENCY. n. f. [con and efficiē, Latin.] Co-operation; the state of acting together to some single end.

The managing and carrying on of this work, by the spirits instrumental cofficiency, requires, that they be kept together, without distinction or dissipation. Glanville's Scaphis.

COEFFICIENT. n. f. [con and efficient, Latin.] 1. That which unites its action with the action of another.

2. [In algebra.] Such numbers, or given quantities, that are put before letters, or unknown quantities, into which letters they are supposed to be multiplied, and so do make a rectangle, or product with the letters; as 4 a, b x, c xx; where 4 is the coefficient of 4 a; b of b x, and c of c xx. Chambers.

3. In fluxions.

The coefficient of any generating term (in fluxions) is the quantity arising by the division of that term, by the generated quantity. Chambers.

COELIACK Paffion. [coelicus, the belly.] A diarrhoea, or flux, that arises from the indigestion or putrefaction of food in the stomach and bowels, whereby the aliment comes away little altered from what it was when eaten, or changed like corrupted stinking flesh. Quincy.

COEMPTION. n. f. [coemptio, Lat.] The act of buying up the whole quantity of any thing.

Monopolies and coemption of wares for resale, where they are not restrained, are great means to enrich. Bacon's Essays.

COEQUAL. adj. [from con and equalis, Lat.] Equal; being of the same rank or dignity with another.

Henry the Fifth did sometime prophecy,

If once he came to be a cardinal,

He'll make his cap coequal with the crown.

COEQUALITY. n. f. [from coequal.] The state of being equal.

TO COERCE. v. a. [coerceo, Latin.] To restrain; to keep in order by force.

COERCIBLE. adj. [from coerce.]

1. That may be restrained.

2. That ought to be restrained.

COERCION. n. f. [from coerce.] Penal restraint; check.

The coercion or execution of the sentence in ecclesiastical courts, is only by excommunication of the person contumacious. Hale's Common Law.

Government has coercion and animadversion upon such as neglect their duty; without which coercive power, all government is toothless and precarious. South.

COERCIVE. adj. [from coerce.]

1. That which has the power of laying restraint.

All things on the surface spread, are bound

By their coercive figure to the ground! Blackm.

2. That which has the power of restraining by punishment.

For ministers to seek that themselves might have coercive power over the church, would have been hardly construed. Hooker, Preface.

The virtues of a general, or a king, are prudence, counsel, active fortitude, coercive power, awful command, and the exercise of magnanimity, as well as justice. Dryden.

COESSENTIAL. adj. [con and essentia, Latin.] Participating of the same essence.

The Lord our God is but one God, in which indivisible unity we adore the Father, as being altogether of himself; we glorify that substantial word which is the son; we bless and magnify that coessential Spirit eternally proceeding from both, which is the Holy Ghost. Hooker.

COESSENTIALITY. n. f. [from coessential.] Participation of the same essence.

COETANEOUS. adj. [con and etās, Latin.] Of the same age with another: with to.

COETERNITY. n. f. [from coeternal.] Having existence from eternity equal with another eternal being.

The eternity of the Son's generation, and his coeternity and consubstantiality with the Father, when he came down from heaven, and was incarnate. Hammond's Fund.

COEVAL. adj. [coevus, Latin.]

1. Of the same age.

Even his teeth and white, like a young flock, Coeval, and new-shorn, from the clear brook Recent. Prior.

2. Of the same age with another: followed by with.

This religion cannot pretend to be coeval with man. Hale.

The monthly revolutions of the moon, or the diurnal of the earth upon its own axis, by the very hypothesis are coeval with the former. Bentley.

Silence! coeval with eternity;

Thou wert; ere nature first began to be:

'Twas one vast nothing all, and all slept fast in thee! Pope.

3. Sometimes by to.

Although we had no monuments of religion anterior than idolatry, we have no reason to conclude, that idolatrous religion was coeval to mankind. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

COEVAL. n. f. [from the adjective.] A contemporary; but properly one not only living at the same time, but of the same time of life.

As it were not enough to have outdone all your coevals in wit, you will excel them in good-nature. Pope.

COEVIOUS. adj. [coevus, Lat.] Of the same age.

Then it should not have been the first, as supposing some other things coevous to it. South.

TO COEXIST. v. n. [con and existo, Latin.]

1. To exist at the same time.

The three stars that coexist in heavenly constellations, are a multitude of stars. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Of substances no one has any clear idea, farther than of certain simple ideas coexisting together. Locke.

2. Followed by with.

It is sufficient that we have the idea of the length of any regular periodical appearances, which we can in our minds apply to duration, with which the motion or appearance never coexisted. Locke.

COEXISTENCE. n. f. [from coexist.]

1. Having existence at the same time with another: with to.

Locke, who in the preceding lines has coexisted with, has here coexistence to.

The measuring of any duration, by some motion, depends not on the real coexistence of that thing to that motion, or any other periods of revolution. Locke.

2. More commonly followed by with.

We can demonstrate the being of God's eternal ideas, and their coexistence with him. Grew's Cofmol.

COEXISTENT. adj. [from coexist.]

1. Having existence at the same time with another: with to.

To the measuring the duration of any thing by time, it is not requisite that that thing should be coexistent to the motion we measure by, or any other periodical revolution. Locke.

2. Sometimes with.

This proves no antecedent necessity, but coexistent with the act. Bramb. Answer to Hobbes.

Time is taken for so much of duration as is coexistent with the motions of the great bodies of the universe. Locke.

All that one point is either future or past, and no parts are coexistent or contemporary with it. Bentley.

TO COEXTEND. v. a. [con and extendo, Latin.]

To extend to the same space or duration with another.

Every motion is, in some sort, coextended with the body moved. Grew's Cofmol.

COEXTENSION. n. f. [from coextend.] The act or state of extending to the same space or duration with another.

Though it be a spirit, I find it is no inconvenience to have some analogy, at least of coextension, with my body. Hale.

COFFEE. n. f. [It is originally Arabick, pronounced cabeu by the Turks, and cabub by the Arabs.] The tree is a species of Arabick Jasamine.

It is found to succeed as well in the Caribbee islands as in their native place of growth: but whether the coffee produced in the West Indies will prove as good as that from Mocha in Arabia Felix, time will discover. Miller.

COFFEE denotes a drink prepared from the berries, very familiar in Europe for these eighty years, and among the Turks for one hundred and fifty. Thevenot, the traveller, was the first who brought it into France; and a Greek servant, called Pafqua, brought into England by Mr. Daniel Edwards, a Turkey merchant, in 1652, to make his coffee, first set up the profession of coffeeeman, and introduced the drink among us. Chambers.

They have in Turkey a drink called coffee, made of a berry of the same name, as black as foot, and of a strong scent, but not aromatic; which they take, beaten into powder, in water, as hot as they can drink it. This drink comforteth the brain and heart, and helpeth digestion. Bacon.

To part her time 'twixt reading and bohea,

Or o'er cold coffee trifle with the spoon. Pope.

COFFEEHOUSE. n. f. [coffee and house.] A house of entertainment where coffee is sold, and the guests are supplied with news papers.

At ten, from coffeehouse or play,

Returning, finishes the day. Prior.

It is a point they do not concern themselves about, farther than perhaps as a subject in a coffeehouse. Swift.

COFFEEEMAN. n. f. [coffee and man.] One that keeps a coffeehouse.

Consider your enemies the Lacedemonians; did ever you hear that they preferred a *coffee*man to Agesilaus? Addison.

1. To flatter; to wheedle; to soothe by adulatory speeches.

I'll mountebank their loves,
Cog their hearts from them, and come home beloved.

Of all the trades in Rome. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

2. To Cog a die. To secure it so as to direct its fall; to falsify.

But then my study was to cog the dice,
And dextrously to throw the lucky dice.

Dryden's Pers. Sat.

For guineas in other men's breeches,
Your gamesters will palm and will cog. Swift.

Ye gallants of Newgate, whose fingers are nice,
In diving in pockets, or cogging of dice. Swift.

3. To obtrude by falsehood.

The outcry is, that I abuse his demonstration by a falsification, by cogging in the word.

Tillotson, Preface.

I have cogged in the word to serve my turn.

Stillingfleet.

Fustian tragedies, or insipid comedies, have by concerted applauses, been cogged upon the town for masterpieces. Dennis.

To Cog. v. n. To lie; to wheedle.

Now stealth he, now will he crave
And now will he cozen and cog. Tusser.

The decoction of coleworts is also commended to bathe them.

Wifman of an Erysipelat.
 She took the coleworts, which her husband got
 From his own ground (a small well-water'd spot);

She strip'd the stalks of all their leaves; the best
 She cull'd, and then with handy care she dress'd 'd.

Dryden.
 How turnips hide their swelling heads below,
 And how the closing coleworts upwards grow.

Gay.
COLICK, n. f. [colicus, Latin.]

It strictly is a disorder of the colon; but loosely, any disorder of the stomach or bowels that is attended with pain. There are four sorts: 1. A bilious colick, which proceeds from an abundance of acrimony or choler irritating the bowels, so as to occasion continual gripes, and generally with a looseness; and this is best managed with lenitives and emollients. 2. A flatulent colick, which is pain in the bowels from flatul's and wind, which distend them into unequal and unnatural capacities; and this is managed with carminatives and moderate openers. 3. An hysterical colick, which arises from disorders of the womb, and is communicated by consent of parts to the bowels; and is to be treated with the ordinary hystericks. 4. A nervous colick, which is from convulsive spasms and contortions of the guts themselves, from some disorders of the spirits, or nervous fluid, in their component fibres; whereby their capacities are in many places streightened, and sometimes so as to occasion obstinate obstructions: this is best remedied by brisk catharticks, joined with opiates and emollient diluters. There is also a species of this distemper which is commonly called the stone colick, by consent of parts, from the irritation of the stone or gravel in the bladder or kidneys; and this is most commonly to be treated by nephriticks and oily diuretics, and is greatly assisted with the carminative turpentine clysters.

Quincy.
Colicks of infants proceed from acidity, and the air in the aliment expanding itself, while the aliment ferments.

Arbutnot.
COLICK, adj. Affecting the bowels.
 Intestine stone, and ulcer, colick pangs. Milton.

Thus saying, from his radiant seat he rose,
 Of high collateral glory. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Running parallel.

3. Diffused on either side.

But man by number is to manifest
 His single imperfection; and beget
 Like of his like, his image multiply'd;
 In unity defective, which requires Collateral love, and dearest amity.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

4. In genealogy, those that stand in equal relation to some common ancestor.

The estate and inheritance of a person dying intestate, is, by right of devolution, according to the civil law, given to such as are allied to him ex latere, commonly filled collaterally, if there be no ascendants or descendants surviving at the time of his death.

Ayliffe's Paragon.

5. Not direct; not immediate.

They shall hear and judge 'twixt you and me;
 If by direct or by collateral hand
 They find us touch'd, we will our kingdom give
 To you in satisfaction.

Shakspere.
 6. Concurrent.

All the force of the motive lies within itself: it receives no collateral strength from external considerations.

Atterbury.
COLLA'TERALLY, adv. [from collateral.]

COLON. n. f. [κόλον, a member.]

1. A point [:] used to mark a pause greater than that of a comma, and less than that of a period. Its use is not very exactly fixed, nor is it very necessary, being confounded by most with the semicolon. It was used before punctuation was refined, to mark almost any sense less than a period. To apply it properly, we should place it, perhaps, only where the sense is continued without dependence of grammar or construction; as, I love him, I despise him: I have long ceased to trust, but shall never forgo to succour him.

2. The greatest and widest of all the intestines, about eight or nine hands breadth long. It begins where the ileum ends, in the cavity of the os ilium on the right side; from thence ascending by the kidney, on the same side, it passes under the concave side of the liver, to which it is sometimes tied, as likewise to the gall-bladder, which tinges it yellow in that place: then it runs under the bottom of the stomach to the spleen in the left side, to which it is also knit: from thence it turns down to the left kidney; and thence passing, in form of an S, it terminates at the upper part of the os sacrum, in the rectum. Quincy.

Now, by your cruelty hard bound, I strain my guts, my colon wound. Swift.

The contents of the colon are of a four, fetid, acid smell in rabbits. Floyer on the Humours.

COLONEL. n. f. [Of uncertain etymology. Skinner imagines it originally colonialis, the leader of a colony. Minshew deduces it from colonna, a pillar: as, patrius columnar; exercitus columnar. Each is plausible.] The chief commander of a regiment; a field officer of the highest rank, next to the general officers. It is now generally founded with only two distinct syllables, col'nel.

The chief's help must be the care of the colonel, that hath the government of all his garrison. Spenser on Ireland.

Captain or colonel, or knight in arms, Whose chance on these defenceless doors may seize, If deed of honour did thee ever please, Guard them, and him within protect from harms. Milton.

COLONELSHIP. n. f. [from colonel.] The office or character of colonel.

While he continued a subaltern, he complained against the pride of colonels towards their officers; yet, in a few minutes after he had received his commission for a regiment, he confessed that colonelship was coming fast upon him. Swift.

TO COLONISE. v. a. [from colony.] To plant with inhabitants; to settle with new planters; to plant with colonies.

There was never an hand drawn, that did double the rest of the habitable world, before this; for so a man may truly term it, if he shall put to account as well that that is, as that which may be hereafter, by the farther occupation and colonizing of those countries: and yet it cannot be affirmed, if one speak ingenuously, that it was the propagation of the Christian faith that was the adamant of that discovery, entry, and plantation; but gold and silver, and temporal profit and glory; so that what was first in God's providence, was but second in man's appetite and intention. Bacon.

Druina hath advantage by acquiescence of islands, which she colonizeth and fortifieth daily. Horvel's Vocal Forest.

COLONNADE. n. f. [from colonna, Italian, a column.]

In times to come,

My waves shall wash the walls of might Rome. Dryden.

Taking a lease of land for years to come, at the rent of one hundred pounds. Locke.

60. COME is a word of which the use is various and extensive, but the radical signification of tendency hitherto is uniformly preserved. When we say he came from a place, the idea is that of returning, or arriving, or becoming nearer; when we say he went from a place, we conceive simply departure; or removal to a greater distance. The latter comes. It is passing from its former state to that which is desired, it is advancing towards us. COME [participle of the verb.]

Thy words were heard, and I am come to thy words. Daniel.

COME. A participle of exhortation; be quick; make no delay.

Come let us make our father drink wine.

Genesis, xix. 32.

COMEDIAN. n. f. [from comedy.]

1. A player or actor of comick parts.

2. A player in general; a stage player; an actress or actor.

Melissarion, pretty honey-bee, when of a comedian she became a wealthy man's wife, would be saluted madam Pithias, or Prudence. Camden's Rem.

3. A writer of comedies.

Scaliger willeth us to admire Plautus as a comedian, but Terence as a pure and elegant speaker. Peacocks of Poetry.

COMEDY. n. f. [comedia, Lat.] A dramatick representation of the lighter faults of mankind, with an intention to make vice and folly ridiculous: opposed to tragedy.

Your honour's players

Are come to play a pleasant comedy.

Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.

A long, exact, and serious comedy.

In every scene one moral let it teach.

And, if it can, at once both please and preach. Pope.

COMELINESS. n. f. [from comely.] Grace; beauty; dignity. It signifies something less forcible than beauty, less elegant than grace, and less light than prettiness.

A carelefs comeliness with comely care. Sidney.

The service of God hath not such perfection of grace and comeliness, as when the dignity of the place doth concur. Hooker.

They skilled not of the goodly ornaments of poetry, yet were sprinkled with some pretty flowers, which gave good grace and comeliness. Spenser's Ireland.

Hardly shall you meet with man or woman so aged or ill-favoured, but if you will commend them for comeliness, nay and for youth too, shall take it well. South.

There is great pulchritude and comeliness of proportion in the leaves, flowers, and fruits of plants. Ray on the Creation.

A horseman's coat shall hide

Thy taper shape, and comeliness of side. Prior.

COMELY. adj. [from become; or from cpe-man, Sax. to please.]

1. Graceful; decent; having dignity or grandeur of mien or look. Comeliness seems to be that species of beauty which excites respect rather than pleasure.

If the principal part of beauty is in decent motion, no marvel though persons in years seem many times more amiable; for no youth can be comely but by pardon, and considering the youth as to make up the comeliness. Bacon.

He that is comely when old and decrepit, surely was very beautiful when he was young. South.

Thou art a comely, young, and valiant knight. Dryden.

2. Used of things; decent: according to propriety.

Oh, what a world is this, when what is comely

Envenoms him that bears it? Shakespeare's As you like it.

This is a happier and more comely time,

Than when these fellows ran about the streets,

Crying confusion. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

COMELY. adv. [from the adjective.] Handsomely; gracefully.

To ride comely, to play at all weapons, to dance comely, be very necessary for a courtly gentleman. Afcham's Schoolmaster.

COMER. n. f. [from come.] One that comes.

Time is like a fashionable host,

That slightly shakes his parting guest by th' hand;

But with his arms outstretch'd, as he would fly,

Grasps in the comer: welcome ever smiles,

And farewell goes out sighing. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

Yourself, renowned prince, then stood as fair

As any comer I have look'd on yet,

For my affection. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

Plants move upwards; but if the sap puts up too fast, it maketh a slender stalk, which will not support the weight; and therefore these are all swift and hasty comers. Bacon.

It is natural to be kind to the last comer. L'Estrange.

Now leave those joys, unsuited to thy age,

To a fresh comer, and resign the stage. Dryden.

The renowned champion of our lady of Loretto, and the miraculous translation of her chapel, about which he hath published a defiance to the world, and offers to prove it against all comers. Stillingfleet.

There it is not strange, that the mind should give itself up to the common opinion, or render itself to the first comer. Locke.

House and heart are open for a friend; the passage is easy, and not only admits, but even invites the comer. South.

COMET. n. f. [cometa, Lat. a hairy star.]

A heavenly body in the planetary region appearing suddenly, and again disappearing; and during the time of its appearance, moving through its proper orbit, like a planet. The orbits of comets are ellipses, having one of their foci in the centre of the sun;

and being very long and eccentric, they become invisible, when in that part most remote from the sun. Comets, popularly called blazing stars, are distinguished from other stars by a long train or tail of light, always opposite to the sun: hence arises a popular division of comets into three kinds, bearded, tailed, and haired comets; though the division rather relates to the different circumstances of the same comet, than to the phenomena of the several. Thus when the comet is eastward of the sun, and moves from it, the comet is said to be bearded, barbatus, because the light marches before it. When the light is westward of the sun, the comet is said to be tailed, because the train follows it. When the comet and the sun are diametrically opposite, the earth being between them, the train is hid behind the body of the comet, excepting a little that appears around it, in form of a border of hair, hence called crinitus.

According to Sir Isaac Newton, the tail of a comet is a very thin vapour, emitted by the head or nucleus of the comet. Ignited by the neighbourhood to the sun, and this vapour is furnished by the atmosphere of the comet. The vapours of comets being thus dilated, rarefied, and diffused, may probably, by means of their own gravity, be attracted down to the planets, and become intermingled with their atmospheres. For the conservation of the water, and moisture of the planets, comets seem absolutely requisite; from whose condensed vapours and exhalations all that moisture which is spent in vegetations and putrefactions, and turned into dry earth, may be resupplied and recruited; for all vegetables increase wholly from fluids; and turn, by putrefaction, into earth. Hence the quantity of dry earth must continually increase, and the moisture of the globe decrease, and at last be quite evaporated, if it have not a continual supply. And I suspect, adds Sir Isaac, that the spirit which makes the finest, subtlest, and best part of our air, and which is absolutely requisite for the life and being of all things, comes principally from the comets.

The same great author has computed that the sun's heat, in the comet of 1680, was, to his heat with us at Midsummer, as twenty-eight thousand to one; and that the heat of the body of the comet, was near two thousand times as great as that of red-hot iron. He also calculates, that a globe of red-hot iron, of the dimensions of our earth, would scarce be cool in fifty thousand years. If then the comet be supposed to cool a hundred times as fast as red-hot iron, yet, since its heat was a thousand times greater, supposing it of the bigness of the earth, it would not be cool in a million of years. Trevoux's Chambers's.

And wherefore gaze this goodly company, As if they saw some wondrous monument. Some comet, or unusual prodigy.

Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.

Such his fell glances as the fatal light

Of staring comets. Grasshopper.

I considered a comet, or, in the language of the vulgar, a blazing star, as a sky-rocket discharged by an hand that is almighty. Addison's Guardian.

Fierce meteors shoot their arbitrary light,

And comets march with lawless horrors bright. Prior.

He is not only the most communicative of all beings, but he will also communicate himself in such measure as entirely to satisfy; otherwise some degrees of communicativeness would be wanting.

COMMUNION. n. f. [communio, Latin.]
1. Intercourse; fellowship; common possession; participation of something in common; interchange of transactions.
Consider, finally, the angels, as having with us that communion which the apostle to the Hebrews noteth; and in regard whereof angels have not disclaimed to profess themselves our fellow-servants.

We are not, by ourselves, sufficient to furnish ourselves with competent stores for such a life as our nature doth desire; therefore we are naturally induced to seek communion and fellowship with others.
The Israelites had never any communion or affairs with the Ethiopians.

Thou, so pleas'd,
Can'st raise thy creature to what height thou wilt
Of union, or communion, deify'd.
We maintain communion with God himself, and are made in the same degree partakers of the Divine nature.
2. The common or publick celebration of the Lord's Supper; the participation of the blessed sacrament.
They resolv'd, that the standing of the communion table in all churches should be altered.
Tertullian reporteth, that the picture of Christ was engraven upon the communion cup.

3. A common or publick act.
Man began publickly to call on the name of the Lord; that is, they served and praised God by communion, and in publick manner.

4. Union in the common worship of any church.
Bare communion with a good church, can never alone make a good man; if it could, we should have no bad ones.
Ingenuous men have lived and died in the communion of that church.

COMMUNITY. n. f. [communitas, Latin.]
1. The commonwealth; the body politick.

How could communities,
Degrees in schools, and brotherhood in cities;
But by degree, stand in authentick place?

Not in a single person only, but in a community or multitude of men.
This parable may be aptly enough expounded of the laws that secure a civil community.
It is not designed for her own use, but for the whole community.
The love of our country is impress'd on our mind, for the preservation of the community.

He lives not for himself alone, but hath a regard in all his actions to the great community.
2. Common possession; the state contrary to property or appropriation.

Sit up and revel,
Call all the great, the fair and spirited dames
Of Rome about thee, and begin a fashion
Of freedom and community.
The undistinction of many in the community of name, or misapplication of the act of one unto the other, hath made some doubt thereof.

This text is far from proving Adam sole proprietor, it is a confirmation of the original community of all things.
3. Frequency: commonness. Not in use.
He was but, as the cuckoo is in June,
Heard, not regarded; seen, but with such eyes,
As, sick and blunted with community,
Afford no extraordinary gaze.

COMMUTABILITY. n. f. [from commutable.] The quality of being capable of exchange.
COMMUTABLE. adj. [from commute.] That may be exchanged for something else; that may be bought off, or ransomed.

COMMUTATION. n. f. [from commute.]
1. Change; alteration.
An innocent nature could hate nothing that was innocent: in a word, so great is the commutation, that the foul then hated only that which now only it loves, i. e. sin.

2. Exchange; the act of giving one thing for another.
The whole universe is supported by giving and returning, by commerce and commutation.
According to the present temper of mankind, it is absolutely necessary that there be some method and means of commutation, as that of money.

The use of money in the commerce and traffick of mankind, is that of saving the commutation of more bulky commodities.

3. Ransom; the act of exchanging a corporal for a pecuniary punishment.
The law of God had allowed an evasion, that is, by way of commutation or redemption.

COMMUTATIVE. adj. [from commute.] Relative to exchange; as commutative justice, that honesty which is exercised in traffick, and which is contrary to fraud in bargains.

To COMMUTE. v. a. [commuto, Lat.]
1. To exchange; to put one thing in the place of another; to give or receive one thing for another.
This will commute our tasks, exchange these pleasant and gainful ones, which God assigns for those uneasy and fruitless ones we impose on ourselves.

2. To buy off, or ransom one obligation by another.
Some commute swearing for whoring; as if forbearance of the one were a dispensation for the other.

To COMMUTE. v. n. To atone; to bargain for exemption.
Those institutions which God designed for means to further men in holiness, they look upon as a privilege to serve instead of it, and to commute for it.

COMMUTUAL. adj. [con and mutual.] Mutual; reciprocal; used only in poetry.

3

Love our hears, and hymen did our hands,
Unite commutual in most sacred bands.

There, with commutual zeal, we both had strove
In acts of dear benevolence and love;
Brothers in peace, not rivals in command.

COMPACT. n. f. [paetum, Lat.] A contract;
an accord; an agreement; a mutual and settled appointment between two or more, to do or to forbear something. It had anciently the accent on the last syllable.

I hope the king made peace with all of us;
And the compact is firm and true in me.

In the beginnings of speech there was an implicit compact founded upon common consent, that such words, voices, or gestures should be signs whereby they would express their thoughts.

To COMPACT. v. a. [compingo, compactum, Lat.]
1. To join together with firmness; to unite closely; to consolidate.

Inform her full of my particular fears;
And thereto add such reasons of your own,
As may compact it more.
Nor are the nerves of his compact strength
Stretch'd and dissolv'd into unfinew'd length.

By what degrees this earth's compact sphere Was harden'd, woods, and rocks, and towns to bear.

This disease is more dangerous, as the solids are more strict and compact, and consequently more so as people are advanced in age.

Now the bright sun compact the precious stone,
Imparting radiant lustre, like his own.

2. To make out of something.
If he, compact of jars, grow musical,
We shall have shortly discord in the spheres.

3. To league with.
Thou pernicious woman,
Compact with her that's gone, think'st thou thy oaths,
Though they would swear down each particular fact,

Were testimonies. We see the world to compact, that each thing preserveth other things, and also itself.

1. Firm; solid; close; dense; of firm texture.
Is not the density greater in free and open spaces, void of air and other grosser bodies, than within the pores of water, glass, crystal, gems, and other compact bodies?

Without attraction the dissevered particles of the chaos could never convene into such great compact masses as the planets.

2. Compacted; confisting.
The lunatic, the lover, and the poet,
Are of imagination all compact.

A wand'ring fire,
Compact of unctuous vapour, which the night
And the cold environs round condensés
Kindled thro' agitation to a flame.

In one hand Pan has a pipe of seven reeds, compact with wax together.

4. Brief, and well connected; as, a compact discourse.

Where a foreign tongue is elegant, expressive, close, and compact, we must study the utmost force of our language.

COMPACTEDNESS. n. f. [from compacted.]
Firmness; density.

Sticking or compactness, being natural to density, requires some excess of gravity in proportion to the density, or some other outward violence, to break it.

Those atoms are supposed infrangible, extremely compacted and hard; which compactness and hardness is a demonstration, that nothing could be produced by them.

COMPACTLY. adv. [from compact.]

1. Closely; densely.
2. With neat joining; with good compacture.

COMPACTNESS. n. f. [from compact.] Firmness; closeness; density.

is not discoverable in this, for it coming short of their compactness and durity.

The best lime mortar will not have attained its utmost compactness, till fourscore years after it has been employed in building. This is one reason why in demolishing ancient fabrics, it is easier to break the stone than the mortar.

The rest, by reason of the compactness of terrestrial matter, cannot make its way to wells.

COMPACTURE. n. f. [from compact.] Structure;
manner in which any thing is joined together;
compagination. A good word, but not in use.

And over it a fair portcullis hong,
Which to the gate directly did incline,
With comely compass and compacture strong, Neither unevenly short, nor yet exceeding long.

having the qualities of a companion; sociable,
maintaining friendly intercourse.

Towards his queen he was nothing uxorious,
but companionable and respectful.

1. One with whom a man frequently converses, or with whom he shares his hours of relaxation.
It differs from friend, as acquaintance from confidence.

How now, my lord? why do you keep alone?
Of sorriest fancies your companions make?

Some friend is a companion at the table, and will not continue in the day of thy affliction.

With anxious doubts, with raging passions torn,
No sweet companion near, with whom to mourn.

2. A partner; an associate.

Epaphroditus, my brother and companion in labour, and fellow soldier.

Bereav'd of happiness thou may'st partake
His punishment, eternal misery;
Which would be all his solace and revenge,
Thee once to gain companion of his woe.

3. A familiar term of contempt; a fellow.

I scorn you, scurvy companion! What? you poor, base, rascally, cheating, lack-linen mate:
away, you mouldy rogue away.

You would found me from my lowest note to the top of my compass. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

From harmony, from heavenly harmony,
This universal frame began:

From harmony to harmony,
Through all the compass of the notes it ran,
The diapason closing full in man. Dryden.

8. [This is rarely used in the singular.] The instrument with which circles are drawn.

If they be two, they are two so,
As stiff twin compasses are two:
Thy foul, the fixt foot, makes no show
To move; but doth, if th' other do. Donne.

In his hand
He took the golden compasses, prepar'd
In God's eternal store, to circumscribe
This universe, and all created things. Milton's Paradise Lost.

To fix one foot of their compass wherever they think fit, and extend the other to such terrible lengths, without describing any circumference at all, is to leave us and themselves in a very uncertain state. Swift.

9. The instrument composed of a needle and sard, whereby mariners steer.

The breath of religion fills the sails, profit is the compass by which factious men steer their course. King Charles.

Rude as their ships was navigation then;

They were not satisfied with their government, and apprehensive of his rudeness and want of complacency. Clarendon.

His great humanity appeared in the benevolence of his aspect, the complacency of his behaviour, and the tone of his voice. Addison's Freeholder.

Complacency and truth, and manly sweetness,
Dwell ever on his tongue, and smooth his thoughts. Addison.

With mean complacence ne'er betray your trust,
Nor be so civil as to prove unjust. Pope.

COMPLACENT, adj. [from complacens, Lat.] Civil; affable; soft; complaisant.

To COMPLAIN, v. n. [from complaignere, French.]

1. To mention with sorrow or resentment; to murmur; to lament. With of before the cause of sorrow: sometimes with on.

Lord Hastings,
Humbly complaining to her duty,
Got my lord chamberlain his liberty.

Shakespeare's Richard III.
I will speak in the anguish of my spirit, I will complain in the bitterness of my soul Job, vii. 11.
Shall I, like thee, on Friday night complain?
For on that day was Cœur de Lion slain.

Dryden's Fables.

Congreve and this author are the most eager complainants of the dispute. Collier's Defence.

COMPLAINER. n. f. [from complain.] One who complains; a murmurer; a lamenter.

St. Jude observes, that the murmurers and com-plainers are the same who speak swelling words.

Government of the Tongue.
Phillips is a complainer; and on this occasion I told lord Carteret, that complainers never succeed at court, though railers do. Swift.

COMPLAINTE. n. f. [from complaine, French.]
1. Representation of pains or injuries; lamentation.

I cannot find any cause of complaint, that good laws have so much been wanting unto us, as we to them. Hooker's Dedication.

As for me, is my complaint to man. Job, xxx. 4.
Adam saw

Already in part, though hid in gloomiest shade,
To sorrow abandon'd, but worst felt within,
And in a troubled sea of passion tossed,
Thus to disburthen fought with sad complaint.

Milton.
2. The cause or subject of complaint; grief.
The poverty of the clergy in England hath been the complaint of all who wish well to the church.

Swift.
3. A malady; a disease.

One, in a complaint of his bowels, was let blood
'till he had scarce any left, and was perfectly cured.

Arbutnot on Aliments.
4. Remonstrance against; information against.
Full of vexation, come I with complaint Against my child.

Shakespeare's Midsummer Night's Dream.
In evil strait this day I stand

Before my judge, either to undergo Myself the total crime, or to accuse
My other self, the partner of my life;
Whose failing, while her faith to me remains,
I should conceal, and not expose to blame
By my complaint; but strict necessity
Subdues me, and calamitous constraint. Milton.
Against the goddess these complaints be made.

Dryden's Æneid.
COMPLAINANCE. n. f. [from complaisance, French.]
Civility; desire of pleasing; act of adulation.

Her death is but in complaisance to her. Dryden.
You must also be industrious to discover the opinion of your enemies; for you may be assured, that they will give you no quarter, and allow nothing to complaisance. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Fair Venus wept the sad disaster
Of having lost her favourite dove.
In complaisance poor Cupid mourn'd:
His grief reliev'd his mother's pain. Prior.
COMPLAISANT. adj. [from complaisant, French.]
Civil; desirous to please.

There are whom my satire seems too bold;
Scarce to wife Peter complaisant enough,
And something said of Chartres much too rough.

Pope.
COMPLAISANTLY. adv. [from complaisant.]
Civily; with desire to please; ceremoniously.
In plenty starving, tantaliz'd in state,
And complaisantly help'd to all I hate:
Treated, care'd, and tir'd, I take my leave.

Pope.

muscles. Derbam.

COMPLAINT. See COMPLETE.
COMPLEMENT. n. f. [from complementum, Latin.]
1. Perfection; fulness; completion; complement.

Our custom is both to place it in the front of our prayers as a guide, and to add it in the end of some principal limbs or parts, as a complement which fully perfecteth whatsoever may be defective in the rest. Hooker.

They as they feasted had their fill,
For a full complement of all their ill. Hub. Tal.
For a complement of these blessings, they were enjoyed by the protection of a king of the most harmless disposition, the most exemplary piety,
the greatest sobriety, chastity, and mercy.

Clarendon.
The sensible nature, in its complement and integrity, hath five exterior powers or faculties.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.
2. Complete set; complete provision; the full quantity or number.

The god of love himself inhabits there,
With all his rage, and dread, and grief and care; }
His complement of stores, and total war. Prior.

3. Adscititious circumstances; appendages; parts not necessary, but ornamental: whence ceremony was called complement, now corrupted to compliment.

If the case permitteth not baptism to have the decent complements of baptism, better it were to enjoy the body without his furniture than to wait for this, 'till the opportunity of that, for which we desire it, be lost. Hooker.

These, which have lastly sprung up, for complements, rites, and ceremonies of church actions, are, in truth, for the greatest part, such silly things, that very easiness doth make them hard to be disputed of in serious manner. Hooker.

A doleful case desires a doleful song,
Without vain art or curious complements. Spenser.

Garish'd and deck'd in modest complement,
Not working with the ear, but with the eye.

Shakespeare.
4. [In geometry.] What remains of a quadrant of a circle, or of ninety degrees, after any certain arch hath been retrenched from it.

is what the logarithm wants of 10,000,000.

Chambers.
COMPLETE. adj. [from completus, Lat.]

1. Perfect; full; having no deficiencies.
With us the reading of scripture is a part of our church liturgy, a special portion of the service which we do to God; and not an exercise to spend the time, when one doth wait for another coming,
'till the assembly of them that shall afterwards
worship him be complete. Hooker.

And ye are complete in him which is the field of all principality and power. Col. ii. 10.
Then marvel not, thou great and complete man,
That all the Greeks begin to worship Ajax.

Shakespeare.
2. Complete, having no degrees, cannot properly admit more and more.

If any disposition should appear towards sogood a work, the assistance of the legislative power would be necessary to make it more complete.

Swift.
3. Finished; ended; concluded.
This course of vanity almost complete,
Tir'd in the field of life, I hope retreat. Prior.
To COMPLETE. v. a. [from the noun.] To perfect; to finish.

Mr. Sanderfon was completed master of arts.

Walton.
Bred only and completed to the taste of lustful appetence. Milton.

To town he comes, completes the nation's hope,
And heads the bold train'd-bands, and burns a Pope. Pope.

COMPLETELY. adv. [from complete.] Fully;
perfectly.

Then tell us, how can you your bodies roll,
Through space of matter, so completely full?

Blackmore.
Whatever person could aspire to be completely witty, smart, humorous and polite, must be able to retain in his memory every single sentence contained in this work. Swift.

COMPLEMENT. n. f. [from complementum, French.] The act of completing.

racter to bear a malevolence to the best men.

Pope.
COMPLEX. adj. [from complexus, Latin.] Compound. COMPLEXED. } site; of many parts; not simple; including many particulars.

To express complexed significations, they took a liberty to compound and piece together creatures of allowable forms into mixtures inexistant.

Brown.
Ideas made up of several simple ones, I call complex; such as beauty, gratitude, a man, the universe; which though complicated of various simple ideas, or complex ideas made up of simple ones, yet are considered each by itself as one. Locke.

A secondary essential mode, called a property, sometimes goes toward making up the essence of a complex being. Watts.

With such perfection fram'd,
Is this complex stupendous scheme of things.

Thomson's Spring.
COMPLEX. n. f. [from the adjective.] Complication; collection.

This parable of the wedding-supper compre-hends in it the whole complex of all the blessings and privileges exhibited by the gospel. South's Sermons.

COMPLEXEDNESS. n. f. [from complex.] Complication; involution of many particular parts in one integral; contrariety to simplicity; compound state or nature.

From the complexedness of these moral ideas, there follows another inconvenience, that the mind cannot easily retain those precise combinations.

Locke.
COMPLEXION. n. f. [from complexio, Latin.]
VOL. I. N^o. 9. T t 1. The

1. The inclosure or involution of one thing in another.

Though the terms of propositions may be complex, yet where the composition of the argument is plain, simple and regular, it is properly called a simple syllogism, since the complexion does not belong to the syllogistical form of it. Watts.

2. The colour of the external parts of any body. Men judge by the complexion of the sky The state and inclination of the day.

Shakespeare's Richard II.
What see you in those papers that you lose
So much complexion? Shakespeare's Henry V.
He so takes on yonder, so rails against all married mankind, so curses all Eve's daughters, of what complexion forever. Shakespeare.

Why doth not beauty then refine the wit,
And good complexion rectify the will? Davies.
Nicer, though it renders them insignificant to great purposes, yet it polishes their complexion, and makes their spirits seem more vigorous.

Collier on Pride.
If I write on a black man, I run over all the eminent persons of that complexion.

3. The temperature of the body according to the various proportions of the four medical humours.

'Tis ill, though different your complexions are,
The family of heav'n for men should war.

Dryden's Fables.
For from all tempers he could service draw,
The worth of each, with its alloy, he knew;
And, as the confidant of nature, saw
How the complexions did divide and brew. Dryden.
The methods of providence, men of this complexion must be unfit for the contemplation of.

Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

COMPOST. n. s. [Fr. compositum, Lat.] A mixture of various substances for enriching the ground;
manure.

Avoid what is to come,
And do not spread the compost on the weeds,
To make them ranker.

We also have great variety of composts and soils,
for the making of the earth fruitful.

Water young planted shrubs, amomum especially, which you can hardly refresh too often,
and it requires abundant compost.

There, as his dream foretold, a cart he found,
That carry'd compost forth to dung the ground.

In vain the nursing grove
Seems fair awhile, cherish'd with foster earth;
But when the alien compost is exhaust,
Its native poverty again prevails.

To COMPOST. v. a. [from the noun.] 'To mature; to enrich with soil.

By removing into worse earth, or forbearing to compost the earth, water-mint turneth into field-mint, and the colewort into rape.

As for earth, it composts itself; for I knew a garden that had a field poured upon it, and it did bear fruit excellently.

COMPOSTURE. n. s. [from composit.] Soil; manure. Not used.

The earth's a thief,
That feeds and breeds by a composture stol'n
From gen'ral excrements.

COMPOSURE. n. s. [from compose.]
1. The act of composing or inditing.

Their own forms are not like to be so founded or comprehensive of the nature of the duty, as forms of publick composition.

2. Arrangement; combination; mixture; order.
Hence languages arise, when, by institution and agreement, such a composition of letters, such a word, is intended to signify such a certain thing.

From the various compositions and combinations of these corpuscles together, happen all the varieties of the bodies formed out of them.

3. The form arising from the disposition of the various parts.

In composition of his face,
Liv'd a fair but manly grace,

4. Frame; make; temperament.
To reel the streets at noon, and stand the buffet
With flaves that smell of sweat; say this becomes him:

As his composition must be rare indeed,
Whom these things cannot blemish.

The duke of Buckingham sprung, without any help, by a kind of congenial composition, to the likeness of our late sovereign and master.

5. Adjustment.
God will rather look to the inward raptures of the mind than to the outward form and composition of the body.

6. Composition; framed discourse.
Discourses on such occasions are seldom the productions of leisure, and should be read with those favourable allowances that are made to hasty compositions.

In the compositions of men, remember you are a man as well as they; and it is not their reason, but your own, that is given to guide you.

7. Sedateness; calmness; tranquillity.
To whom the virgin majesty of Eve,
As one who loves, and some unkindness meets,
With sweet austere composition thus reply'd.

The calmest and sereneest hours of life, when the passions of nature are all silent, and the mind enjoys its most perfect composition.

8. Agreement; composition; settlement of differences.
The treaty at Uxbridge gave the fairest hopes of an happy composition.

Van guard! to right and left the front unfold,
That all may see, who hate us, how we seek Peace and composition.

Things were not brought to an extremity: there seems yet to be room left for a composition; hereafter there may be only for pity.

COMPUTATION. n. s. [from computatio, Lat.] The act of drinking or tipping together.

Secrecy to words spoke under the rose, only mean, in computation, from the ancient custom in sympotick meetings, to wear chaplets of roses.

If thou wilt prolong
Dire computation, forthwith reason quits
Her empire to confusion and misrule,
And vain debates; then twenty tongues at once
Conspire in senseless jargon; nought is heard
But din and various clamour, and mad rant.

To COMPOUND. v. a. [from compono, Lat.]
1. To mingle many ingredients together in one mass.

2. To form by uniting various parts.
Whoever compounds any like it, shall be cut off.

It will be difficult to evince, that nature does not make decompounded bodies; I mean, mingle together such bodies as are already compounded of elementary, or rather simple ones.

The ideas, being each but one single preception, are easier got than the more complex ones; and therefore are not liable to the uncertainty which attends those compounded ones.

3. To mingle in different positions; to combine.
We cannot have a single image that did not enter through the sight; but we have the power of altering and compounding those images into all the varieties of picture.

3. COMPOUND or aggregated Flower, in botany, is such as consists of many little flowers, con-curring together to make up one whole one;
each of which has its style and stamina, and adhering seed, and are all contained within one and the same calyx: such are the sunflower and dan-dellion.

COMPOUND. n. s. [from the verb.] The mass
formed by the union of many ingredients.
For present use or profit, this is the rule: consider the price of the two simple bodies; consider again the dignity of the one above the other in use; then see if you can make a compound, that will save more in price than it will lose in dignity
of the use.

As man is a compound and mixture of flesh as well as spirit.

Love, why do we one passion call?
When 'tis a compound of them all;
Where hot and cold, where sharp and sweet,
In all their equipages meet.

COMPOUNDABLE. adj. [from compound.] Capable of being compounded.

COMPOUNDER. n. s. [from To compound.]

Catullus then did with the winds compound.

Paracelsus and his admirers have compounded with the Galenists, and brought a mixed use of chymical medicines into the present practice.

4. To determine. This is not in use.
We here deliver,
Subscribed by the consuls and patricians,
Together with the seal of the senate, what We have compounded on.

COMPOUND. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Formed out of many ingredients; not simple.
The ancient electrum had in it a fifth of silver to the gold, and made a compound metal, as fit for most uses as gold.

Compound substances are made up of two or more simple substances.

2. [In grammar.] Composed of two or more words; not simple.

Those who are his greatest admirers seem pleased with them as beauties; I speak of his compound epithets.

3. COMPOUND or aggregated Flower, in botany,
is such as consists of many little flowers, con-curring together to make up one whole one;
each of which has its style and stamina, and adhering seed, and are all contained within one and the same calyx: such are the sunflower and dan-
dellion.

COMPOUND. n. s. [from the verb.] The mass
formed by the union of many ingredients.

For present use or profit, this is the rule: consider the price of the two simple bodies; consider
again the dignity of the one above the other in use; then see if you can make a compound, that will save more in price than it will lose in dignity
of the use.

As man is a compound and mixture of flesh as
well as spirit.

Love, why do we one passion call?
When 'tis a compound of them all;
Where hot and cold, where sharp and sweet,
In all their equipages meet.

COMPOUNDABLE. adj. [from compound.] Capable of being compounded.

COMPOUNDER. n. s. [from To compound.]
1. One who endeavours to bring parties to terms of agreement.

Those softeners, sweeteners, compounders, and expedient-mongers, who shake their heads so strongly.

2. A mingler: one who mixes bodies.

TO COMPREEND. v. a. [comprehendo, Lat.]

1. To comprise; to include; to contain; to imply.

If there be any other commandment, it is briefly comprehended in this saying, namely, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. Rom. xiii. 9.

It would be ridiculous to grow old in the study of every necessary thing, in an art which comprehends so many several parts. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

2. To contain the mind; to understand; to conceive.

Rome was not better by her Horace taught, Than we are here to comprehend his thought. Waller.

'Tis unjust, that they who have not the least notion of heroic writing should therefore condemn the pleasure which others receive from it, because they cannot comprehend it. Dryden.

COMPREHENSIBLE. adj. [comprehensibilis, Fr. comprehensibilis, Latin.]

1. Intelligible; attainable by the mind; conceivable by the understanding.

The horizon sets the bounds between the enlightened and dark parts of things, between what is and what is not comprehensible by us. Locke.

2. Possible to be comprised.

Let this part of knowledge should seem to any not comprehensible by axiom, we will set down some heads of it. Bacon.

COMPREHENSIBLY. adv. [comprehensibiliter, Fr.] With great power of signification or understanding; significantly; with great extent of sense.

The words wisdom and righteousness are commonly used very comprehensively, so as to signify all religion and virtue. Tillotson.

COMPREHENSION. n. f. [comprehensio, Lat.]

1. The act or quality of comprising or containing; inclusion.

In the Old Testament there is a close comprehension of the New, in the New an open discovery of the Old. Hooker.

The comprehension of an idea regards all essential modes and properties of it; so body, in its comprehension, takes in solidity, figure, quantity, mobility. Watts's Logick.

2. Summary; epitome; compendium; abstract; abridgment in which much is comprised.

If we would draw a short abstract of human happiness, bring together all the various ingredients of it, and digest them into one prescription, we must at last fix on this wise and religious aphorism in my text, as the sum and comprehension of all. Rogers.

3. Knowledge; capacity; power of the mind to admit and contain many ideas at once.

You give no proof of decay of your judgment, and comprehension of all things, within the compass of an human understanding. Dryden.

4. [In rhetoric.] A trope or figure, by which the name of a whole is put for a part, or that of a part for the whole, or a definite number for an indefinite. Harris.

COMPREHENSIVE. adj. [comprehensivus, Lat.]

1. Having the power to comprehend or understand many things at once.

He must have been a man of a most wonderful comprehensive nature, because he has taken into the compass of his Canterbury tales the various manners and humours of the whole English nation in his age; not a single character has escaped him. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

His hand unstain'd, his uncorrupted heart, His comprehensive head; all int'rests weigh'd, All Europe sav'd, yet Britain not betray'd. Pope's Epistles.

2. Having the quality of comprising much; compendious; extensive.

So diffusive, so comprehensive, so catholic a grace is charity, that whatever time is the opportunity of any other virtue, that time is the opportunity of charity. Spratt's Sermons.

COMPREHENSIVELY. adv. [comprehensivè, Fr.] In a comprehensive manner.

COMPREHENSIVENESS. n. f. [comprehensivitas, Lat.] The quality of including much in a few words or narrow compass.

Compare the beauty and comprehensiveness of legends on ancient coins. Addison on Ancient Medals.

TO COMPRESS. v. a. [compressus, Latin.]

1. To force into a narrower compass; to squeeze together.

2. To embrace.

Her Neptune ey'd, with bloom of beauty blest, And in his cave the yielding nymph compress'd. Pope's Odyssey.

There was in the island of Ito a young girl compress'd by a genius, who delighted to associate with the mules. Pope.

COMPRESS. n. f. [from the verb.] Bolsters of linen, by which surgeons suit their bandages for any particular part or purpose. Quincy.

I applied an intercipient about the ankle and upper part of the foot, and by compresses and bandage dress'd it up. Wise.

COMPRESSIBILITY. n. f. [from compressibilis, Fr.]

The quality of being compressible; the quality of admitting to be brought by force into a narrower compass; as air may be compressed, but water can by no violence be reduced to less space than it naturally occupies.

COMPRESSIBLE. adj. [from compressibilis, Fr.] Capable of being forced into a narrower compass: yielding to pressure, so as that one part is brought nearer to another.

Their being spiral particles, accounts for the elasticity of air; their being spherical particles, which gives free passage to any heterogeneous matter, accounts for air's being compressible. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

COMPRESSIBLENESS. n. f. [from compressibilis, Fr.] Capability of being pressed close. Dict.

COMPRESSION. n. f. [compressio, Latin.] The act of bringing the parts of any body more near to each other by violence; the quality of admitting such an effort of force as may compel the body compressed into a narrower space.

Whensoever a solid body is pressed, there is an inward tumult in the parts, seeking to deliver themselves from the compression; and this is the cause of all violent motion. Bacon.

The powder in shot, being dilated into such a flame as endureth not compression, moveth in round, the flame being in the nature of a liquid body, sometimes recoiling. Bacon.

Tears are the effects of the compression of the moisture of the brain, upon dilatation of the spirits. Bacon's Natural History.

Merry Michael the Cornish poet piped this upon his oaten pipe for merry England, but with a mocking compression for Normandy. Camden's Rem.

He that shall find out an hypothesis, by which water may be so rare, and yet not be capable of compression by force, may doublets, by the same hypothesis, make gold and water, and all other bodies, as much rarer as he pleases; so that light may find a ready passage through transparent substances. Newton.

COMPRESSURE. n. f. [from compressio, Latin.] The act or force of the body pressing against another.

We tried whether heat would, notwithstanding so forcible a compressure, dilate it. Boyle's Spring of the Air.

TO COMPRISE. v. n. [comprimere, Latin.]

To print together; it is commonly taken, in law, for the deceitful printing of another's copy or book, to the prejudice of the rightful proprietor. Philips's World of Words.

TO COMPRISE. v. a. [comprimere, Fr.] To contain; to comprehend; to include.

Necessity of shortness causeth men to cut off impertinent discourses, and to comprise much matter in few words. Hooker.

Do they not, under doctrine, comprehend the same that we intend by matters of faith; Do not they, under discipline, comprise the regimen of the church? Hooker.

'Tis the polluted love that multiplies; But friendship does two souls in one comprise. Rosamond.

COMPROBATION. n. f. [comprobo, Lat.] Proof; attestation.

That is only esteemed a legal testimony which receives corroboration from the mouths of at least two witnesses. Brown.

COMPROMISE. n. f. [compromissum, Lat.]

1. Compromise is a mutual promise of two or more parties at difference, to refer the ending of their controversies to the arbitrement or equity of one or more arbitrators. Cowell.

2. A compact or bargain, in which some concessions are made on each side.

Wars have not wasted it; for warr'd he hath not; But basely yielded, upon compromise, That which his ancestors achiev'd with blows. Shakespeare's Richard II.

TO COMPROMISE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To compound; to adjust a compact by mutual concessions: as, they compromised the affair at a middle rate.

2. In Shakespeare it means, unusually, to accord; to agree.

Laban and himself were compromis'd, That all the yearlings, which were freak'd and pied, Should fall as Jacob's hire. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

COMPROMISSORIAL. adj. [from compromissus, Fr.]

Relating to a compromise.

COMPROMISSORIALITY. n. f. [from compromissus, Fr.] Belonging to the same province.

At the consecration of an archbishop, all his compromissors ought to give their attendance. Ayliffe's Paragon.

COMPT. n. f. [compte, Fr. computus, Lat.] Account; computation; reckoning.

Your servants ever

Have theirs, themselves, and what is theirs, in compt, To make their audit at your highness' pleasure, Still to return your own. Shakespeare's To Compt.

COMPULSATORY. adj. [from compulsatorius, Latin.] Having the force of compelling; coercive.

Which is no other

But to recover from us by strong hand, And terms compulsatory, those forefald lands So by his father lost. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

COMPUSSION. n. f. [compulsio, Latin.]

1. The act of compelling to something; force; violence of the agent.

If reasons were as plenty as blackberries, I would give no man a reason on compulsion. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Thoughts

Thoughts, whither have ye led me! with that sweet

Compulsion thus transported. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Such sweet compulsion doth in musick lye,
To lull the daughters of necessity. Milton.
2. The state of being compelled; violence suffered.

Compulsion is in an agent capable of volition, when the beginning or continuation of any action is contrary to the preference of his mind. Locke.

When the fierce foe hung on our broken rear,
With what compulsion and laborious flight
We sunk thus low? Milton's Paradise Lost.

This faculty is free from compulsion, and so spontaneous, and free from determination by the particular object. Hale.

Possibly there were others who assisted Harold, partly out of fear and compulsion.

COMPU'LSIVE. adj. [from compulsor, Fr. compulsus, Latin.] Having the power to compel; forcible. Hale on Common Law.

The Danube, vast and deep,
Supreme of rivers, to the frightful brink,
Urg'd by compulsive arms, soon as they reach'd,
New terror chill'd their veins. Philips.

The clergy would be glad to recover their dues by a more short and compulsive method. Swift.

COMPU'LSIVELY. adv. [from compulsive.] By force; by violence.

COMPU'LSIVENESS. n. f. [from compulsive.] Force; compulsion.

COMPU'LSORILY. adv. [from compulsory.] In a compulsory or forcible manner; by force; by violence.

To say that the better deserver hath such a right to govern, as he may compulsorily bring under the less worthy, is idle. Bac.

COMPU'LSORY. adj. [from compulsare, French.] Having the power of necessitating or compelling.

He ereth in this, to think that actions, proceeding from fear, are properly compulsory actions; which, in truth, are not only voluntary, but free actions; neither compelled, nor so much as physically necessitated. Bramb. against Hobbes.

Kindly it would be taken to comply with a patent, although not compulsory. Swift.

COMPU'NCTION. n. f. [from compunctio, Fr. from pungo, punctum, to prick, Latin.]

1. The power of pricking; stimulation; irritation.

This is that acid and piercing spirit, which, with such activity and compunction, invadeth the brains and nostrils of those that receive it. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. The state of being pricked by the conscience; repentance; contrition.

He acknowledged his disloyalty to the king, with expressions of great compunction. Clarendon.

COMPU'NCTIOUS. adj. [from compunctio.] Repentant; sorrowful; tender.

Stop up th' access and passage to remorse,
That no compunctious visitings of nature
Shake my fell purpose. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

COMPU'NCTIVE. adj. [from compunctio.] Causing remorse.

COMPU'RGATION. n. f. [from compurgatio, Latin.] The practice of justifying any man's veracity by the testimony of another.

COMPU'RGATOR. n. f. [Latin.] One who bears his testimony to the credibility of another.

The next quarry, or chalk-pit, will give abundant attestation: these are so obvious, that I need not be far to seek for a compurgator. Woodward's Natural History.

COMPU'TABLE. adj. [from compute.] Capable of being numbered or computed.

If, instead of twenty-four letters, there were twenty-four millions, as those twenty-four millions are a finite number; so would all combinations thereof be finite, though not easily computable by arithmetic. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

COMPU'TATION. n. f. [from compute.]

1. The act of reckoning; calculation.

My princely father
Then, by just computation of the time,
Found that the issue was not his. Shak. Rich. III.

2. The sum collected or settled by calculation. We pass for women of fifty: many additional years are thrown into female computations of this nature. Addison's Guardian.

TO COMPUTE. v. a. [compute, Latin.] To reckon; to calculate; to number; to count.

Compute how much water would be requisite to lay the earth under water. Burnet's Theory of Earth.

Where they did compute by weeks, yet still the year was measured by months. Holder on Time.

Alas! not dazzled with their noon-tide ray;
Compute the morn and ev'ning to the day;

The whole amount of that enormous fame,
A tale that blends their glory with their shame. Pope.

COMPU'TE. n. f. [computus, Latin.] Computation; calculation.

Though there were a fatality in this year, yet divers were out in their account, aberring several ways from the true and just compute; and calling that one years which perhaps might be another. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

COMPU'TER. n. f. [from compute.] Reckoners; accountant; calculator.

The kalendars of these computers, and the accounts of these days, are different. Brown's Vul. Errors.

I have known some such ill computers, as to imagine the many millions in stocks so much real wealth. Swift.

COMPU'TIST. n. f. [computiste, Fr.] Calculator; one skilled in the art of numbers or computation.

The treasurer was a wife man, and a strict computist. Wotton.

We conceive we have a year in three hundred and sixty-five days exact: computists tell us, that we escape six hours. Brown.

COM'RADE. n. f. [comrade, Fr. from camera, a chamber, one that lodges in the same chamber, contubernio frutor.]

1. One who dwells in the same house or chamber.

Rather I abjure all roofs, and chuse
To be a comrade with the wolf and owl. Shakespeare's King Lear.

2. A companion; a partner in any labour or danger.

He permitted them
To put out both thine eyes, and fetter'd send thee
Into the common prison, there to grind
Among the slaves and asses, thy comrades,
As good for nothing else. Milton's Agonistes.

A footman, being newly married, desired his comrade to tell him freely what the town said of it. Swift.

CON. A Latin inseparable preposition, which, at the beginning of words, signifies union or association: as concourse, a running together; to convene, to come together.

CON. [abbreviated from contra, against, Latin.] A cant word for one who is on the negative side of a question; as the pros and cons.

TO CON. v. a. [connan, Sax. to know: as in Glaucer, Old wymen connen moobil thinge; that is, Old women have much knowledge.]

1. To know.

Of muses, Hobbinol, I conne no skill Enough to me to paint out my unrest. Spenser's Pastorals.

2. To study; to commit to memory; to fix in the mind. It is a word now little in use, except in ludicrous language.

Pretty answers: have you not been acquainted with goldsmiths wives, and con'd them out of rings. Shakespeare.

Here are your parts; and I am to intreat you to con them by to-morrow night. Shakespeare's Midsummer Night's Dream.

Our understanding cannot in this body arrive so clearly to the knowledge of God, and things invisible, as by orderly conning over the visible and inferior creatures. Milton.

Shew it him written; and, having the other also written in the paper, shew him that, after he has con'd the first, and require it of him. Holder's Elements of Speech.

The books of which I'm chiefly fond,
Are such as you have whilom con'd. Prior.

All this while John had con'd over such a catalogue of hard words, as were enough to conjure up the devil. Arbutnot.

3. To CON thanks; an old expression for to thank. It is the same with sevoir grâ.

I con him no thanks for't, in the nature he delivers it. Shakespeare.

TO CONCA'MERATE. v. a. [concamero, Lat.] To arch over; to vault; to lay concave over.

Of the upper beak, an inch and a half consisteth of one concamerated bone, bended downwards, and toothed as the other. Grew's Museum.

CONCAMERATION. n. f. [from concamerate.] Arch; vault.

What a romance is the story of those impossible concamerations, and feigned rotations of solid orbs? Glanville's Scopf.

TO CONCA'TENATE. v. a. [from catena, Lat. a chain.] To link together; to unite in a successive order.

CONCATENATION. n. f. [from concatenate.] A series of links; an uninterrupted unvariable succession.

The stoicks affirmed a fatal, unchangeable concatenation of causes, reaching to the elicit acts of man's will. South.

CONCAVATION. n. f. [from concave.] The act of making concave.

CONCAVE. adj. [concaus, Lat.]

1. Hollow without angles; as, the inner surface of an eggshell, the inner curve of an arch: opposed to convex.

These great fragments falling hollow, inclosed under their concave surface a great deal of air. Burnet's Theory.

2. Hollow.

Have you not made an universal shout,
That Tyber trembled underneath his banks,
To hear the replication of your sounds
Made in his concave shores? Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

For his verity in love, I do think him as concave as a covered goblet, or a worm-eaten nut. Shakespeare's As you like it.

CONCAVENESS. n. f. [from concave.] Hollow-ness. Diet.

CONCAVITY. n. f. [from concave.] Internal surface of a hollow spherical or spheroidal body. Niches that contain figures of white marble should not be coloured in their concavity too black. Wotton.

They have taken the impresses of these shells with that exquisite niceness, that no metal, when melted and cast in a mould, can ever possibly represent the concavity of that mould with greater exactness than these flints do the concavities of the shells, wherein they were moulded. Woodward's Natural History.

CONCAVO-CONCAVE. adj. Concave or hollow on both sides.

CONCAVO-CONVEX. adj. [from concave and convex.] Concave one way, and convex the other.

I procured another concavo-convex plate of glass, ground on both sides to the same sphere with the former plate. Newton.

A concavo-convex pentangular plate, part of a shell that belongs to the entrochus. Woodward on Fossils.

CONCAVOUS. adj. [concaus, Lat.] Concave; hollow without angles.

CONCAVOUSLY. adv. [from concauous.] With hollowness; in such a manner as discovers the internal surface of a hollow sphere.

The dolphin that carries Arion is concavously inverted, and hath its spine depressed. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO CONCEAL. v. a. [concelo, Lat.] To hide; to keep secret; not to divulge; to cover; not to detect.

He oft finds med'cine, who his grief imparts;
But double griefs afflict concealing hearts. F. Queen.

Conceal

Come, Catesby, thou art sworn
As deeply to effect what we intend,
As closely to conceal what we impart.

Shakespeare's Richard III.
Ulysses himself adds, he was the most eloquent and the most silent of men: he knew that a word spoke never wrought so much good as a word concealed. Broome.

There is but one way I know of conversing safely with all men, that is, not by concealing what we say or do, but by saying or doing nothing that deserves to be concealed. Pope.

CONCEALABLE. adj. [from conceal.] Capable of being concealed; possible to be kept secret, or hid.

Returning a lye unto his Maker, and presuming to put off the searcher of hearts, he denied the omniscience of God, whereunto there is no thing concealable. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CONCEALEDNESS. n. f. [from conceal.] The state of being concealed; privacy; obscurity. Dict.

CONCEALER. n. f. [from conceal.] He that conceals any thing.

They were to undergo the penalty of forgery,
and the concealor of the crime was equally guilty.
Clarendon.

CONCEALMENT. n. f. [from conceal.]

1. The act of hiding; secrecy.

She never told her love;
But let concealment, like a worm i' the bud,
Feed on her damask cheek. Shakef. Twelfth Night.

He is a worthy gentleman,
Exceedingly well read, and profited
In strange concealments. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Few own such sentiments, yet this concealment derives rather from the fear of man than of any Being above. Glanville.

2. The state of being hid; privacy; delitescence.

A person of great abilities is zealous for the good of mankind, and as solicitous for the concealment as the performance of illustrious actions.

Addison's Freeholder.

3. Hiding-place; retreat; cover; shelter.

The choice of this holy name, as the most effectual concealment of a wicked design, supposes mankind satisfied that nothing but what is just is directed by the principles of it. Rogers.

The cleft tree

Offers its kind concealment to a few;
Their food its insects, and its moss their nest.

Thomson.

To CONCEDE. v. a. [concedo, Lat.] To yield;
to admit; to grant; to let pass undisputed.

By expurgator animadversions we might strike out great numbers of hidden qualities; and having once a conceded list, we might with more safety attempt their reasonings. Brown.

This must not be conceded without limitation.

Boyle.

The atheist, if you concede to him that fortune may be an agent, doth presume himself safe and invulnerable. Bentley.

CONCEIT. n. f. [concept, French; conceptus,
Latin.]

1. Conception; thought; idea; image in the mind.

Here the very shepherds have their fancies lifted to so high conceits, as the learned of other nations are content both to borrow their names and imitate their cunning. Sidney.

Impossible it was, that ever their will should change or incline to remit any part of their duty, without some object having force to avert their conceit from God. Huoker.

His grace looks cheerfully and smooth this morning:—

There's some conceit, or other, likes him well,
When that he bids good-morrow with such spirit.

Shakespeare.

In laughing there ever precedeth a conceit of somewhat ridiculous, and therefore it is proper to man. Bacon's Natural History.

2. Understanding; readiness of apprehension.

How often, alas! did her eyes say unto me, that they loved? and yet, I not looking for such a matter, had not my conceit open to understand them. Sidney.

The first kind of things appointed by laws humane, containeth whatsoever is good or evil, is notwithstanding more secret than that it can be discerned by every man's present conceit, without some deeper discourse and judgment. Hooker.

I shall be found of a quick conceit in judgment, and shall be admired. Wif. viii. 11.

3. Opinion, generally in a sense of contempt;
fancy; imagination; fantastical notion.

I know not how conceit may rob
The treasury of life, when life itself
Yields to the theft. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Strong conceit, like a new principle, carries all easily with it, when yet above common sense.

Locke.

Malbranche has an odd conceit,
As ever enter'd Frenchman's pate. Prior.

4. Opinion in a neutral sense.
Seest thou a man wise in his own conceit?
There is more hope of a fool than of him.

Prov. xxvi. 12.

I shall not fail to approve the fair conceit,
The king hath of you. Shakef. Henry VIII.

5. Pleasant fancy; gaiety of imagination; acuteness.

His wit is as thick as Tewksbury mustard;
there is no more conceit in him than is in a mallet.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

While he was on his way to the gibbet, a freak took him in the head to go off with a conceit.

L'Estrange.

6. Sentiment, as distinguished from imagery.
Some to conceit alone their works confine,
And glitt'ring thoughts struck out at every line.

Pope.

7. Fondness; favourable opinion; opinionative pride.

Since by a little studying in learning, and great conceit of himself, he has lost his religion; may he find it again by harder study under humbler truth.

Bentley.

8. Out of CONCEIT with. Not longer fond of.
Not that I dare assume to myself to have put him out out of conceit with it, by having convinced him of the fantasticalness of it.

Tillotson, Preface.

What hath chiefly put me out of conceit with this moving manner, is the frequent disappointment.

Swift.

To CONCEIT. v. a. [from the noun.] To conceive; to imagine; to think; to believe.

One of two bad ways you must conceit me,
Either a coward, or a flatterer.

Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar.

They looked for great matters at their hands, in a cause which they conceived to be for the liberty of the subject. Bacon.

He conceits himself to be struck at, when he is not so much as thought of. L'Estrange.

The strong, by conceiting themselves weak, are thereby rendered as unactive, and consequently as useless, as if they really were so. South's Sermons.

CONCEITED. particip. adj. [from conceit.]

1. Endowed with fancy.

He was of countenance amiable, of feature comely, active of body, pleasantly conceited, and sharp of wit. Knolles.

2. Proud; fond of himself; opinionative; affected; fantastical.

There is another extreme in obscure writers, which some empty conceited heads are apt to run into, out of a prodigality of words, and a want of sense. Felton on the Cliffs.

If you think me too conceited,
Or to passion quickly heated.

Swift.

What you write of me, would make me more conceited than what I scribble myself.

Pope.

3. With of before the object of conceit.

Every man is building a several way, impotently conceited of his own model and his own materials. Dryden.

If we consider how vicious and corrupt the Athenians were, how conceited of their own wit, science, and politeness. Bentley.

CONCEITEDLY. adv. [from conceited.] Fancifully; whimsically.

Conceitedly drefs her, and be assign'd

By you fit place for every flower and jewel:
Make her for love fit fuel. Danhe.

CONCEITEDNESS. n. f. [from conceited.] Pride;
opinionativeness; fondness of himself.

When men think none worthy esteem, but such as claim under their own pretences, partiality and conceitedness makes them give the pre-eminence. Collier on Pride.

CONCEITLESS. adj. [from conceit.] Stupid;
without thought; dull of apprehension.

Think't thou, I am so shallow, so conceitless,
To be seduced by thy flattery.

Shakespeare's Two Gentlemen of Verona.

CONCEIVABLE. adj. [from conceive.]

1. That may be imagined or thought.

If it were possible to contrive an invention, whereby any conceivable weight may be moved by any conceivable power with the same quickness, without other instrument, the works of nature would be too much subjected to art. Wilkins.

2. That may be understood or believed.

The freezing of the words in the air in the Northern climes, is as conceivable as this strange union. Glanville's Sceptis.

It is not conceivable that it should be indeed that very person, whose shape and voice it assumed.

Atterbury's Sermons.

CONCEIVABLENESS. n. f. [from conceivable.]
The quality of being conceivable. Dict.

CONCEIVABLY. adv. [from conceivable.] In a conceivable or intelligible manner.

To CONCEIVE. v. a. [conceivis, Fr. concepire,
Latin.]

1. To admit into the womb; to form in the womb.

I was shapen in iniquity, and in sin did my mother conceive me. Psal. li. 5.

2. To form in the mind; to imagine.

Nebuchadnezzar hath conceived a purpose against
you. Jeremiah.

This man conceived the duke's death; but what was the motive of that felonious conception is in the clouds. Watson.

3. To comprehend; to understand. He conceives the whole system.

This kiss, if it durst speak,

Would stretch thy spirits up into the air:
Conceive, and fare thee well. Shakef. K. Lear.

4. To think; to be of opinion.

If you compare my gentlemen with Sir John,
you will hardly conceive him to have been bred in the same climate. Swift.

To CONCEIVE. v. n.

1. To think; to have an idea of.

The griev'd commons

Hardly conceive of me: let it be nois'd
That, through our intercession, this revokement
And pardon comes. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

O what avails me now that honour high
To have conceived of God, or that salute,
Hail highly favour'd, among women blest!

Milton.

Conceive of things clearly and distinctly in their own natures; conceive of things completely in all their parts; conceive of things comprehensively in all their properties and relations; conceive of things extensively in all their kinds; conceive of things orderly, or in a proper method. Watts's Logick.

2. To become pregnant.

The flocks should conceive when they came to drink. Genesi.

The beauteous maid, whom he beheld,
possess'd:

Conceiving as the slept, her fruitful womb
Swell'd with the founder of immortal Rome.

Addison.

CONCEIVER. n. f. [from conceive.] One that understands or apprehends.

Though hereof prudent symbols and pious alle-gories be made by wiser conceivers, yet common heads will fly unto superstitious applications.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CONCERT. n. f. [concertus, Latin.]

1. Concert of voices; harmony; concord of sound.

It is to be considered, that whatsoever virtue in numbers, for conducting to concent of notes, is rather to be ascribed to the ante-number than to the entire number. Bacon.

2. Consistency.

Reasons borrowed from nature and the school-men as subservient mediums, carry a music and consent to that which God hath said in his word. Dr. Maine.

'Tis in concent to his own principles, which allow no merit, no intrinsic worth to accompany one state more than another. Atterbury.

To CONCENTRATE. v. a. [concentrer, Fr. from con and centrum, Lat.] To drive into a narrow compass; to drive towards the centre: contrary to expand or dilate.

Spirit of vinegar, concentrated and reduced to its greatest strength, will coagulate the serum. Arbutnot on Aliments.

CONCENTRATION. n. f. [from concentrate.] Collection into a narrow space round the centre; compression into a narrow compass.

All circular bodies that receive a concentration of the light must be shadowed in a circular manner. Peasam on Drawing.

To CONCENTRE. v. n. [concentrer, Fr. from con and centrum, Latin.] To tend to one common centre; to have the same centre with something else.

The bricks having first been formed in a circular mould, and then cut, before their burning, into four quarters or more, the sides afterwards join so closely, and the points concentre so exactly, that the pillars appear one intire piece. Wotton.

All these are like so many lines drawn from several objects, that some way relate to him, and concentre in him. Hale.

To CONCENTRE. v. a. To direct or contract towards one centre.

The having a part left to animate, will serve to concentre the spirits, and make them more active in the rest. Decay of Piety.

In these concentring all their precious beams Of sacred influence! Milton.

CONCENTRIC. adj. [concentricus, Lat.] Having CONCENTRICK. s. adj. one common centre.

If, as in water flurr'd, more circles be Produc'd by one, love such additions take; Those, like so many spheres, but one heav'n make;

For they are all concentrick unto thee. Donna.
Any substance, pitched steady upon two points, as on an axis, and moving about on that axis, also describes a circle concentrick to the axis. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

If the crystalline humour had been concentrick to the sclerodes, the eye would not have admitted a whole hemisphere at one view. Ray on the Creation.

If a stone be thrown into stagnating water, the waves excited thereby continue some time to arise in the place where the stone fell into the water, and are propagated from thence into concentrick circles upon the surface of the water to great distances. Newton's Opticks.

The manner of its concretion is by concentrick rings, like those of an onion about the first kernel. Arbutnot on Diet.

Circular revolutions in concentrick orbs about the sun, or other central body, could in no wise be attained without the power of the Divine Arm. Bentley's Sermons.

CONCEPTACLE. n. f. [conceptaculum, Lat.] That in which any thing is contained; a vessel.

There is at this day resident, in that huge conceptacle, water enough to effect such a deluge. Woodward's Natural History, Preface.

CONCEPTIBLE. adj. [from concipio, conceptum, Latin.] That may be conceived; intelligible; capable to be understood.

Some of his attributes, and the manifestations thereof, are not only highly delectable to the intellectual faculty, but are most suitable and easily conceptible by us, because apparent in his works. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

CONCEPTION. n. f. [conceptio, Latin.]

1. The act of conceiving, or growing quick with pregnancy.

I will greatly multiply thy sorrow, and thy conception; in sorrow thou shalt bring forth children. Genesis iii. 16.

Thy sorrow I will greatly multiply
By thy conception; children thou shalt bring In sorrow forth. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. The state of being conceived.
Joy had the like conception in our eyes,
And at that instant, like a babe sprung up. Shakespeare.

Our own productions flatter us: it is impossible not to be fond of them at the moment of their conception. Dryden's Dufresne.

3. Notion; idea; image in the mind.
As conceptions are the images or resemblances of things to the mind within itself, in the like manner are words or names the marks, tokens, or resemblances of those conceptions to the minds of them whom we converse with. South's Sermons.

Consult the acutest poets and speakers, and they will confess that their quickest, most admired conceptions were such as darted into their minds, like sudden flashes of lightning, they knew not how, nor whence; and not by any certain consequence, or dependence of one thought upon another, as it is in matters of ratiocination. South's Sermons.

To have right conceptions about them, we must bring our understandings to the inflexible natures and unalterable relations of things, and not endeavour to bring things to any preconceived notions of our own. Locke.

4. Sentiments; purpose.
Thou but remember't me of my own conception.
I have perceived a most faint neglect of late;
which I have rather blamed as my own jealous curiosity, than as a very pretence and purpose of unkindness. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Please your highness, note
His dangerous conception in this point:
Not friended by his wish to your high person,
His will is most malignant, and it stretches Beyond you to your friends. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

5. Apprehension; knowledge.
And as if beasts conceiv'd what reason were,
And that conception should distinctly show
They should the name of reasonable bear;
For, without reason, none could reason know. Davies.

6. Conceit; sentiment; pointed thought.
He is too flatulent sometimes, and sometimes too dry; many times unequal, and almost always forced; and, besides, is full of conceptions, points of epigram, and witticisms; all which are not only below the dignity of heroic verse, but contrary to its nature. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

CONCEPTIOUS. adj. [conceptum, Latin.] Apt to conceive; fruitful; pregnant.

Common mother,
Ensear thy fertile and conceptious womb;
Let it no more bring out to ingrateful man. Shakespeare's Timon.

CONCEPTIVE. adj. [conceptum, Latin.] Capable to conceive.

In hot climates, and where the uterine parts exceed in heat, by the coldness of this simple they may be reduced into a conceptive constitution. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To CONCERN. v. a. [concerner, Fr. concerno, low Latin.]

1. To relate to; to belong to.
Exclude the use of natural reasoning about the sense of holy scripture, concerning the articles of our faith: and then, that the scripture doth concern the articles of our faith, who can assure us? Hooker.

Count Claudio may hear; for what I would speak of concerns him. Shakespeare.

Gracious things
Thou hast reveal'd; those chiefly which concern
Just Abraham, and his feed. Milton's Paradise Lost.

This place concerns not at all the dominion of one brother over the other, Locke.

2. To affect with some passion; to touch nearly; to be of importance to.

I would not
The cause were known to them it most concerns. Shakespeare.

Our wars with France have affected us in our most tender interests, and concerned us more than those with any other nation. Addison on the War.

It much concerns them not to suffer the king to establish his authority on this side. Addison on Italy.

The more the authority of any station in society is extended, the more it concerns publick happiness that it be committed to men fearing God. Rogers's Sermons.

3. To interest; to engage by interest.

I knew a young negroe who was sick of the small-pox: I found by enquiry, at a person's concerned for him, that the little tumours left whitish specks behind them. Boyle on Colours.

Above the rest two goddesses appear,
Concern'd for each: here Venus, Juno there. Dryden's Æn.

Providence, where it loves a nation, concerns itself to own and assert the interest of religion, by blasting the spoilers of religious persons and places. South's Sermons.

Whatever past actions, it cannot reconcile, or appropriate to that present self by consciousness, it can be no more concerned in than if they had never been done. Locke.

They think themselves out of the reach of providence, and no longer concerned to solicit his favour. Rogers.

4. To disturb; to make uneasy.
In one compressing engine I shut a sparrow, without forcing any air in; and in an hour the bird began to pant, and be concerned, and in less than an hour and a half to be sick. Derham.

5. To concern himself. To intermeddle; to be busy.

Being a layman I thought not to have concerned myself with speculations which belong to the profession. Dryden.

CONCERN. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Business; affair; considered as relating to some one.

Let early care thy main concerns secure,
Things of less moment may delays endure. Denham.

This manner of exposing the private concerns of families, and sacrificing the secrets of the dead to the curiosity of the living, is one of those licentious practices, which might well deserve the animadversion of our government. Addison's Freck.

A heathen emperor said, if the Gods were offended, it was their own concern, and they were able to vindicate themselves. Swift.

Religion is no trifling concern, to be performed in any careless and superficial manner. Rogers.

2. Interest; engagement.

No plots th' alarm to his retirements give;
'Tis all mankind's concern that he should live. Dryden.

When we speak of the conflagration of the world, these have no concern in the question. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

3. Importance; moment.

Mysterious secrets of a high concern,
And weighty truths, solid convincing sense,
Explain'd by unaffected eloquence. Roscommon.

The mind is stunned and dazzled amidst that variety of objects: she cannot apply herself to those things which are of the utmost concern to her. Addison's Spectator.

4. Passion; affection; regard.

Ah, what concerns did both your souls divide!
Your honour gave us what your love deny'd. Dryden.

O Marcia, let me hope thy kind concerns,
And gentle wishes, follow me to battle! Addison's Cato.

Why all this concern for the poor? We want them not, as the country is now managed; where the plough has no work, one family can do the business of fifty. Swift.

CONCERNEDLY. adv. [from concern.] With affection; with interest.

They had more positively and concernedly wedded his cause, than they were before understood to have done. Clarendon.

CONCERNING. prep. [from concern: this word, originally a participle, has before a noun the force of a preposition.] Relating to; with relation to.

There is not any thing more subject to error than the true judgment concerning the power and forces of an estate. Bacon.

The ancients had no higher recourse than to nature, as may appear by a discourse concerning this point in Strabo. Brown.

None can demonstrate that there is such an island as Jamaica, yet, upon testimony, I am free from all doubt concerning it. Tillotson, Preface.

CONCERNMENT. n. f. [from concern.] 1. The thing in which we are concerned or interested; affair; business; interest.

To mix with thy concerns I defist
Henceforth, nor too much disapprove my own. Milton's Agonistes.

This shews how useful you have been,
To bring the king's concerns in. Hudibras.

Yet when we're sick, the doctor's fetch in haste,

Leaving our great concernment to the last. Denham.

When my concernment takes up no more room or compass than myself, then, so long as I know where to breathe and to exist, I know also where to be happy. South.

He that is wise in the affairs and concerns of other men, but careless and negligent of his own, that man may be said to be busy, but he is not wise. Tillotson.

Our spiritual interests, and the great concerns of a future state, would doubtless recur often.

Propositions which extend only to the present life, are small, compared with those that have influence upon our everlasting concerns. Watts on the Mind.

1. Relation; influence.

Sir, 'tis of near concernment, and imports
No less than the king's life and honour. Denham's Sophy.

He justly fears a peace with me would prove
Of ill concernment to his haughty love. Dryden's Indian Emperor.

3. Intercourse; business.

The great concernment of men is with men, one amongst another. Locke.

4. Importance; moment.

I look upon experimental truths as matters of great concernment to mankind, Boyle.

5. Interposition; regard; meddling.

He married a daughter to the earl, without any other approbation of her father, or concernment in it, than suffering him and her to come into his presence. Clarendon.

6. Passion; emotion of mind.

While they are so eager to destroy the fame of others, their ambition is manifest in their concernment. Dryden.

If it carry with it the notion of something extraordinary, if apprehension and concernment accompany it, the idea is likely to sink the deeper. Locke.

TO CONCERN. v. a. [concerner, French, from concernere, Lat. to prepare themselves for some public exhibition or performance, by private encounters among themselves.]

1. To settle any thing in private by mutual communication.

2. To settle; to contrive; to adjust.

Mark, how already in his working brain
He forms the well-concerted scheme of mischief. Rowe.

CONCERT.

CONCERT. n. f. [from the verb.] 1. Communication of designs; establishment of measures among those who are engaged in the same affair.

All those discontents, how ruinous soever, have arisen from the want of a due communication and concert. Swift.

2. A symphony; many performers playing to the same tune.

2. To include; to comprehend.

God hath concluded them all in unbelief, that he might have mercy upon all. Romans, xi. 32.

3. To collect by ratiocination.

The providences of God are promiscuously administered in this world; so that no man can conclude God's love or hatred to any person, by any thing that befalls him. Tillotson.

4. To decide; to determine: that is, to shut or close the dispute.

Youth, ere it sees the world, here studies rest:
And age, returning thence, concludes it best. Dryden.

But no frail man, however great or high,
Can be concluded blest before he die. Addison's Ovid.

5. To end; to finish.

Is it concluded he shall be professor?
It is determined, not concluded yet;
But so it must be, if the king miscarry. Shakespeare's Richard III.

I will conclude this part with the speech of a counsellor of state. Bacon.

These are my theme, and how the war began,
And how concluded by the godlike man. Dryden's Æneid.

6. To oblige, as by the final determination.

The king would never endure that the bare multitude should frustrate the authority of the parliament, wherein their votes and consents were concluded. Bacon's Henry VII.

If therefore they will appeal to revelation for their creation, they must be concluded by it.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

He never refused to be concluded by the authority of one legally summoned. Atterbury.

TO CONCLUDE. v. n.

1. To perform the last act of ratification: to collect the consequence; to determine.

For why should we the busy soul believe,
When boldly she concludes of that and this;

When of herself she can no judgment give,
Nor how, nor whence, nor where, nor what she is? Davies.

The blind man's relations import no necessity of concluding, that though black was the roughest of colours, therefore white should be the smoothest. Boyle on Colours.

There is something infamous in the very attempt: the world will conclude I had a guilty conscience. Arbutnot's History of J. Bull.

2. To settle opinion.

Can we conclude upon Luther's instability, as our author has done, because in a single notion, no way fundamental, an enemy writes that he had some doubtings? Atterbury.

I question not but your translation will do honour to our country; for I conclude of it already from those performances. Addison to Pope.

3. Finally to determine.

They humbly sue unto your excellence,
To have a goodly peace concluded of,
Between the realms of England and of France. Shakespeare.

4. To end.

And all around wore nuptial bonds, the ties
Of love's assurance, and a train of lies,
That, made in lust, conclude in perjuries. Dryden's Fables.

CONCLAVE. n. f. [conclave, Latin.]

They humbly sue unto your excellence,
To have a goodly peace concluded of,
Between the realms of England and of France. Shakespeare.

4. To end.

And all around wore nuptial bonds, the ties
Of love's assurance, and a train of lies,
That, made in lust, conclude in perjuries. Dryden's Fables.

CONCLAVE. n. f. [conclave, Latin.]

1. A private apartment.

2. The room in which the cardinals meet; or the assembly of the cardinals.

I thank the holy conclave for their loves;
They've sent me such a man I would have wish'd for. Shakespeare.

It was said of a cardinal, by reason of his apparent likelihood to step into St. Peter's chair, that in two conclaves he went in pope and came out again cardinal. South's Sermons.

3. A close assembly.

Forthwith a conclave of the godhead meet,
Where Juno in the shining senate sits. Garth.

TO CONCLUDE. v. a. [concludo, Latin.]

1. To shut.

We'll tell when 'tis enough,
Or if it wants the nice concluding bout. King.
CONCLUDENCY. n. f. [from concludent.] Consequence; regular proof; logical deduction of reason.

Judgment concerning things to be known, or the neglect and concludency of them, ends in decision. Hale.

CONCLUDENT. adj. [from conclude.] Decisive; ending in just and undeniable consequences.

Though these kind of arguments may seem more obscure, yet, upon a due consideration of them, they are highly consequential and concludent to my purpose. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

CONCLUDINGLY. adv. [from conclude.] With uncontrovertible evidence.

Examine whether the opinion you meet with repugnant to what you were formerly embued with, be concludingly demonstrated or not. Digby.

CONCLUSIBLE. adj. [from conclude.] Determinable; certain by regular proof.

'Tis as certainly conclusible from God's prescience, that they will voluntarily do this, as that they will do it at all. Hammond.

CONCLUSION. n. f. [from conclude.]
1. Determination; final decision.

Ways of peaceable conclusion there are but these two certain; the one a sentence of judicial decision, given by authority thereto appointed within ourselves; the other, the like kind of sentence given by a more universal authority. Hooker.

2. The collection from propositions premised; the consequence.

The conclusion of experience, from the time past to the time present, will not be found and perfect. Bacon's War with Spain.

And marrying divers principles and grounds,
Out of their match a true conclusion brings. Davies.

Then doth the wit

Build fond conclusions on those idle grounds;
Then doth it fly the good, and ill pursue. Dav.

I only dead by rules of art,

Such as are lawful, and judge by Conclusions of astrology. Hudibras.

It is of the nature of principles, to yield a conclusion different from themselves. Tillotson.

He granted him both the major and the minor;
but denied him the conclusion. Addison's Freeholder.

3. The close; the last result of argumentative deduction.

Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter, fear God and keep his commandments; for this is the whole duty of man. Eccles. xii. 13.

I have been reasoning, and in conclusion have thought it best to return to what fortune hath made my home. Swift.

4. The event of experiments.

Her physician tells me
She has pursued conclusions infinite
Of easy ways to die. Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

We practise likewise all conclusions of grafting and inoculating, as well of wild trees as fruit trees. Bacon's New Atlantis.

5. The end; the last part.

I can speak no longer; yet I will strain myself to breathe out this one invocation, which shall be my conclusion. Howel.

6. In Shakespeare it seems to signify silence; confinement of the thoughts.

Your wife Octavia, with her modest eyes
And still conclusion, shall acquire no honour, Demurring upon me. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cle.

CONCLUSIVE. adj. [from conclude.]

1. Decisive; giving the last determination to the opinion.

The agreeing votes of both houses were not by any law or reason conclusive to my judgment. King Charles.

The last dictate of the understanding is not always absolute in itself, nor conclusive to the will, yet it produces no antecedent nor external necessity. Bromhall's Answer to Hobbes.

They have secret reasons for what they seem to do, which, whatever they are, they must be equally conclusive for us as they were for them. Rogers.

2. Regularly consequential.

Those that are not men of art, not knowing the true forms of syllogism, cannot know whether they are made in right and conclusive modes and figures. Locke.

CONCLUSIVELY. adv. [from conclusive.] Decisively with final determination.

This I speak only to desire Eupolis not to speak peremptorily, or conclusively, touching the point of possibility, till they have heard me deduce the means of the execution. Bacon.

CONCLUSIVENESS. n. f. [from conclusive.] Power of determining the opinion; regular consequence.

Consideration of things to be known, of their several weights, conclusiveness, or evidence. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

To CONCOAGULATE. v. n. [from con and coagulate.] To curdle or congeal one thing with another.

The saline parts of those, upon their solution by the rain, may work upon those other substances, formerly concoagulated with them. Boyle's Experiments.

They do but coagulate themselves, without concoagulating with them any water. Boyle's History of Fumefix.

CONCOAGULATION. n. f. [from concoagulate.] A coagulation by which different bodies are joined in one mass.

To CONCOCT. v. a. [concoquo, Lat.]

1. To digest by the stomach, so as to turn food to nutriment.

The working of purging medicines cometh two or three hours after the medicine taken; for that the stomach first maketh a proof, whether it can concoct them. Bacon.

Assuredly he was a man of a feeble stomach, unable to concoct any great fortune, prosperous or adverse. Hayward.

The vital functions are performed by the general and constant laws; the food is concocted, the heart beats, the blood circulates, the lungs play. Chayne's Phil. Prin.

The notions and sentiments of others judgment, as well as of our own memory, makes our property: it does, as it were, concoct our intellectual food, and turns it into a part of ourselves. Watts on the Mind.

2. To purify or sublime by heat; or heighten to perfection.

The small close-lurking minister of fate,
Whose high concocted venom through the veins
A rapid lightning darts. Thomson's Summer.

3. To ripen.

The root which continueth ever in the earth, is still concocted by the earth; and fruits and grains are half a year in concocting; whereas leaves are out and perfect in a month. Bacon.

CONCOCTION. n. f. [from concoct.] Digestion in the stomach; maturation by heat; the acceleration of any thing towards purity and perfection.

This hard rolling is between concoction and a simple maturation. Bacon's Natural History.

The constant notion of concoction is, that it should signify the degrees of alteration of one body into another, from crudity to perfect concoction, which is the ultimity of that action or process. Bacon's Natural History.

He, though he knew not which foist spake,
Because both meant, both spake the same,
Might thence a new concoction take,
And part far purer than he came. Donne.

CONCOLOUR. adj. [concolor, Lat.] Of one colour; without variety.

In concolour animals, and such as are confined unto the same colour, we measure not their beauty thereby; for if a crow or blackbird grow white, we account it more pretty. Brown.

CONCOMITANCE. n. f. [from concomitor, Lat.]

CONCOMITANCY. n. f. [from concomitor, Lat.] Subistence together with another thing.

The secondary action subsisteth not alone, but in concomitancy with the other; so the nostrils are useful for respiration and smelling, but the principal use is smelling. Brown.

To argue from a concomitancy to a casualty, is not infallibly conclusive. Glanville's Scipio.

CONCOMITANT. adj. [concomitans, Latin.]

Conjoined with; concurrent with; coming and going with, as collateral, not causative, or consequential.

The spirit that furthereth the extension, or dilatation of bodies, and is ever concomitant with porosity and dryness. Bacon.

It has pleased our wife Creator to annex to several objects, as also to several of our thoughts, a concomitant pleasure; and that in several objects, to several degrees. Locke.

CONCOMITANT. n. f. Companion; person or thing collaterally connected.

These effects are, from the local motion of the air, a concomitant of the sound, and not from the sound. Bacon.

He made him the chief concomitant of his heir apparent and only son, in a journey of much adventure. Wotton.

In consumptions the preternatural concomitants, an universal heat of the body, a torminous diarrhoea, and hot distillations, have all a correlative quality. Harvey on Consumptions.

The other concomitant of ingratitude is hard-heartedness, or want of compassion. South's Sermons.

Horror stalks around,
Wild, staring, and his sad concomitant,
Despair, of abject look. Philips.

Reproach is a concomitant to greatness, as fatires and invectives were an essential part of a Roman triumph. Addison.

And for tobacco, who could bear it?
Filthy concomitant of claret! Prior.

Where antecedents, concomitants and consequents, causes, and effects, signs and things signified, subjects and adjuncts, are necessarily connected with each other, we may infer. Watts.

CONCOMITANTLY. adv. [from concomitant.] In company with others. Diaz.

To CONCOMITATE. v. a. [concomitatus, Latin.] To be collaterally connected with any thing; to come and go with another.

This simple bloody spectation of the lungs, is differenced from that which concomitates a pleurisy. Harvey on Consumptions.

CONCORD. n. f. [concordia, Lat.]

1. Agreement between persons or things; suitableness of one to another; peace; union; mutual kindness.

Had I power, I should Pour the sweet milk of concord into hell,
Uproar the universal peace. Shakespeare's Macb.

What concord hath Christ with Belial?
2 Cor. vi. 15.

One shall rise
Of proud ambitious heart, who not content
With fair equality, fraternal state,
Will arrogate dominion undeserv'd
Over his brethren, and quite dispossess
Concord and law of nature from the earth. Milt.

Unsafe within the wind
Of such commotion; such as to set forth
Great things by small, if nature's concord broke,
Among the constellations war were sprung. Milton.

Kind concord, heavenly born! whose blissful reign
Holds this vast globe in one furrounding chain;
Soul of the world! Tickell.

2. A compact.

It appeareth by the concord made between Henry and Roderick the Irish king. Davies on Ireland.

3. Harmony; consent of sounds.

The man who hath not music in himself,
Nor is not mov'd with concord of sweet sounds,
Is fit for treasons. Shakspeare's Merch. of Venice.

4. Principal grammatical relation of one word to another, distinct from regimen.

Have those who have writ about declensions, *concord*s, and syntaxes, lost their labour? Locke.

CON-

CONCORDANCE. n. f. [concordantia, Latin.]

1. Agreement.

2. A book which shews in how many texts of scripture any word occurs.

I shall take it for an opportunity to tell you, how you are to rule the city out of a concordance.

Soub's Sermons, Dedication.

Some of you turn over a concordance, and there, having the principal word, introduce as much of the verse as will serve your turn.

Swift.

An old concordance bound long since.

Swift.

3. A concord in grammar; one of the three chief relations in speech. It is not now in use in this sense.

After the three concordances learned, let the master read unto them the epistles of Cicero.

Albani's Schoolmaster.

CONCORDANT. adj. [concordans, Lat.] Agreeable; agreeing; correspondent; harmonious.

Were every one employed in points concordant to their natures, professions, and arts, commonwealths would rise up of themselves.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CONCORDATE. n. f. [concordat, Fr. concordatum, Lat.] A compact; a convention.

How comes he to number the want of synods in the Gallican church among the grievances of that concordate, and as a mark of their slavery, since he reckons all convocations of the clergy in England to be useless and dangerous?

Swift.

CONCORPORAL. adj. [from concorporo, Lat. to incorporate.] Of the same body.

Dict.

TO CONCORPORATE. v. a. [from con and corpus.] To unite in one mass or substance.

When we see concorporates the sign with the signification, we conjoin the word with the spirit.

Taylor's Worthy Communicant.

TO CONCORPORATE. v. n. [con and corpus.] To unite into one body.

Thus we chastise the god of wine

With water that is feminine,

Until the cooler nymph abate

His wrath, and so concorporate.

Cleveland.

CONCORPORATION. n. f. [from concorporare.]

Union in one mass; intimate mixture.

Dict.

CONCOURSE. n. f. [concurfus, Latin.]

1. The confluence of many persons or things to one place.

Do all the nightly guards,
The city's watches, with the people's fears,
The concourse of all good men, strike thee nothing?

Ben Jonson.

The coalition of the good frame of the universe was not the product of chance, or fortuitous concourse of particles of matter.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Vain is his force, and vainer is his skill,
With such a concourse comes the flood of ill.

Dryden's Fables.

2. The persons assembled.

The prince with wonder hears, from every part,
The noise and busy concourse of the mart.

Dryden's Virgil.

3. The point of junction or intersection of two bodies.

So soon as the upper glass is laid upon the lower, so as to touch it at one end, and to touch the drop at the other end, making, with the lower glass, an angle of about ten or fifteen minutes; the drop will begin to move towards the concourse of the glasses, and will continue to move with an accelerated motion, 'till it arrives at that concourse of the glasses.

Newton.

CONCREMATION. n. f. [from concremo, Lat. to burn together.] The act of burning many things together.

Dict.

CONCREMENT. n. f. [from concreo, Lat.] The mass formed by concretion: a collection of matter growing together.

There is the cohesion of the matter into a more loose consistency, like clay, and thereby it is prepared to the concrement of a pebble or flint.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

CONCRESCENCE. n. f. [from concreo, Latin.] The act or quality of growing by the union of separate particles.

Seeing it is neither a substance perfect, nor inchoate, how any other substance should thence take concrecence hath not been taught.

Raleigh's History of the World.

TO CONCRETE. v. n. [concreo, Latin.] To coalesce into one mass; to grow by the union and cohesion of parts.

The mineral and metallic matter, thus concreting with the crystalline, is equally diffused throughout the body of it.

Woodward's Natural History.

When any saline liquor is evaporated to a cuticle, and let cool, the salt concretes in regular figures; which argues that the particles of the salt, before they concreted, floated in the liquor at equal distances, in rank and file.

Newton.

The blood of some who died of the plague, could not be made to concrete, by reason of the putrefaction begun.

Arbutnot.

TO CONCRETE. v. a. To form by concretion; to form by the coalition of scattered particles.

That there are in our inferior world divers bodies, that are concreted out of others, is beyond all dispute: we see it in the meteors.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

CONCRETE. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Formed by concretion; formed by coalition of separate particles into one mass.

The first concrete state, or consistent surface of the chaos, must be of the same figure as the last liquid state.

Burnet.

2. [In logic.] Not abstract, applied to a subject.

A kind of mutual commutation there is, whereby those concrete names, God and man, when we speak of Christ, do take interchangeably one another's room; so that, for truth of speech, it killeth not whether we say that the son of God hath created the world, and the son of man by his death hath saved it; or else that the son of man did create, and the son of God died to save the world.

Hooker.

Concrete terms, while they express the quality, do also either express or imply, or refer to some subject to which it belongs; as white, round, long, broad, wife, mortal, living, dead: but these are not always nouns adjective in a grammatical sense; for a fool, a philosopher, and many other concretes, are substantives, as well as knavery, folly and philosophy, which are the abstract terms that belong to them.

Watts's Logic.

CONCRETE. n. f. A mass formed by concretion; or union of various parts adhering to each other.

If gold itself be admitted, as it must be, for a porous concrete, the proportion of void to body, in the texture of common air, will be so much the greater.

Bentley's Sermons.

CONCRETELY. adv. [from concrete.] In a manner including the subject with the predicate; not abstractly.

Sin considered not abstractedly for the mere act of obliquity, but concretely, with such a special dependence of it upon the will as serves to render the agent guilty.

Norris.

CONCRETENESS. n. f. [from concrete.] Coagulation; collection of fluids into a solid mass.

Dict.

CONCRETION. n. f. [from concrete.]

1. The act of concreting; coalition.

2. The mass formed by a coalition of separate particles.

Some plants upon the top of the sea, are supposed to grow of some concretion of slime from the water, where the sea stirreth little.

Bacon's Natural History.

Heat, in general, doth not resolve and attenuate the juices of a human body; for too great heat will produce concretions.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

CONCRETIVE. adj. [from concrete.] Having the power to produce concretions; coagulative.

When wood and other bodies petrify, we do not ascribe their induration to cold, but unto salinous spirit, or concretive juices.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CONCRETURE. n. f. [from concrete.] A mass formed by coagulation.

CONCUBINAGE. n. f. [concubinage, Fr. concubina- tas, Latin.] The act of living with a woman not married.

Adultery was punished with death by the ancient heathens; concubinage was permitted.

Broome.

CONCUBINE. n. f. [concubina, Lat.] A woman kept in fornication; a whore; a strumpet.

I know, I am too mean to be your queen;
And yet too good to be your concubine.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

When his great friend was suitor to him to pardon an offender, he denied him: afterwards, when a concubine of his made the same suit, he granted it to her; and said, Such suits were to be granted to whores.

Bacon.

He caused him to paint one of his concubines, Campaspe, who had the greatest share in his affection.

Dryden.

The wife, though a bright goddess, thus gives place

To mortal concubines of fresh embrace.

Granville.

TO CONCUPLICATE. v. n. [conculco, Lat.] To tread, or trample under foot.

Dict.

CONCULCATION. n. f. [conculcatio, Latin.] Trampling with the feet.

Dict.

CONCUPISCENCE. n. f. [concupiscentia, Latin.]

Irregular desire; libidinous wish; lust; lechery.

We know even secret concupiscentia to be sin, and are made fearful to offend, though it be but in a wandering cogitation.

Hooker.

In our faces evident the signs

Of foul concupiscentia; whence evil store,
Ev'n shame, the last of evils.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

Nor can they say, that the difference of climate inclines one nation to concupiscentia and sensual pleasures, another to blood-thirstiness: it would discover great ignorance not to know, that a people has been overrun with recently invented vice.

Bentley's Sermons.

CONCUPISCENT. adj. [concupiscens, Latin.]

Libidinous; lecherous.

He would not, but by gift of my chaste body

To his concupiscent intemperate lust,

Release my brother.

Shak. Measure for Measure.

CONCUPISCENTIAL. adj. [from concupiscent.] Relating to concupiscentia.

Dict.

CONCUPISCIBLE. adj. [concupiscibilis, Latin.]

Impressing desire; eager; desirous; inclining to the pursuit or attainment of any thing.

The schools reduce all the passions to these two heads, the concupiscentia and irascible appetite.

South's Sermon.

TO CONCUR. v. n. [concurro, Latin.]

1. To meet in one point.

Though reason favour them, yet sense can hardly allow them; and, to satisfy, both these must concur.

Temple.

2. To agree; to join in one action, or opinion.

Acts which shall be done by the greater part of my executors, shall be as valid and effectual as if all my executors had concurred in the same.

Swift's Last Will.

3. It has with before the person with whom one agrees.

It is not evil simply to concur with the heathens, either in opinion or action; and that conformity with them is only then in disgrace, when we follow them in that they do amiss, or generally in that they do without reason.

Hooker.

4. It has to before the effect to which one contributes.

Their affections were known to concur to the most desperate counsels.

Clarendon.

Extremes in nature equal good produce,
Extremes in man concur to general use.

Pope.

5. To be united with; to be conjoined.
To have an orthodox belief, and true profession, concurring with a bad life, is only to deny Christ with a greater solemnity.

South.

Testimony is the argument; and if fair probabilities of reason concur with it, this argument hath all the strength it can have.

Tillotson.

6. To contribute to one common event with joint power.

When outward causes concur, the idle are soonest seized by this infection.

Collier on the Spleen.

CON

CONCURRENCE. } n. f. [from concur.]
CONCURRENCE. }

We have no other measure but our own ideas, with the concurrence of other probable reasons, to persuade us. Locke.

2. Agreement; act of joining in any design or measures.

Their concurrence in persuasion, about some material points belonging to the same polity, is not strange. Hooker, Preface.

The concurrence of the peers in that fury, can be imputed to the irreverence the judges were in. Clarendon.

Tarquin the proud was expelled by an universal concurrence of nobles and people. Swift on the Differt. in Athens and Rome.

3. Combination of many agents or circumstances.

Struck with these great concurrences of things. Grayson.

He views our behaviour in every concurrence of affairs, and sees us engage in all the possibilities of action. Addison's Spectator.

4. Assistance; help.

From these sublime images we collect the greatness of the work, and the necessity of the divine concurrence to it. Rogers.

5. Joint right; equal claim.

A bishop might have officers, if there was a concurrence of jurisdiction between him and the archdeacon. Ayliffe.

CONCURRENT. adj. [from concur.]

1. Acting in conjunction; agreeing in the same act; contributing to the same event: concomitant in agency.

I join with these laws the personal presence of the king's son, as a concurrent cause of this reformation. Davies on Ireland.

For without the concurrent consent of all these three parts of the legislature, no such law is or can be made. Hale.

This sole vital faculty is not sufficient to exterminate noxious humours to the periphery, unless the animal faculty be concurrent with it to supply the fibres with animal spirits. Harvey.

All combin'd,

Your beauty, and my impotence of mind;
And his concurrent flame, that blew my fire;
For still our kindred souls had one desire. Dryden's Fables.

2. Conjoined; associate; concomitant.

There is no difference between the concurrent echo and the iterant, but the quickness or slowness of the return. Bacon.

CONCURRENT. n. f. [from concur.] That which concurs; a contributory cause.

To all affairs of importance there are three necessary concurrents, without which they can never be dispatched; time, industry, and faculties. Decay of Pity.

CONCUSSION. n. f. [from concussio, Lat.]

1. The act of shaking; agitation; tremefaction.

It is believed that great ringing of bells in populous cities, hath dissipated pestilential air; which may be from the concussion of the air. Bacon's Natural History.

The strong concussion on the heaving tide,
Roll'd back the vessel to the island's side. Pope's Odyssey.

2. The state of being shaken.

There wants not instances of such an universal concussion of the whole globe, as must needs imply an agitation of the whole abyss. Woodw. Nat. Hist.

CONCUSSIVE. adj. [from concussus, Lat.] Having the power or quality of shaking.

To CONDEMN. v. a. [from condemno, Lat.]

1. To find guilty; to doom to punishment: contrary to absolve.

My conscience hath a thousand several tongues,
And every tongue brings in a several tale,
And every tale condemns me for a villain. Shakespeare's Richard III.

Is he found guilty?

— Yes truly, is he, and condemn'd upon't. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Considered as a judge, it condemns where it ought to absolve, and pronounces absolution where it ought to condemn. Fiddis's Sermons.

2. It has to before the punishment.
The son of man shall be betrayed unto the scribes, and they shall condemn him to death. Matthew xx. 18.

3. To censure; to blame; to declare criminal; contrary to approve.

Who then shall blame

His peeter'd senses to recoil and start,

When all that is within him does condemn

Itself for being there? Shak. Macbeth.

The poet who flourished in the scene, is condemned in the ruelle. Dryden's Æn. Preface.

He who was so unjust as to do his brother an injury, will scarcely be so just as to condemn himself for it. Locke.

They who approve my conduct in this particular, are much more numerous than those who condemn it. Spectator.

4. To fine.

And the king of Egypt put him down at Jerusalem, and condemned the land in an hundred talents of silver. 2 Chron.

There is therefore now no condemnation to them. Romans viii.

CONDEMNATORY. adj. [from condemn.] Passing a sentence of condemnation, or a censure.

He that passes the first condemnatory sentence, is like the incendiary in a popular tumult, who is chargeable with all those disorders to which he gave rise. Government of the Tongue.

CONDEMNER. n. f. [from condemn.] A blamer; a censurer; a censor.

Some few are the only refusers and condemners of this catholic practice. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.

CONDENSABLE. adj. [from condensate.] That which is capable of condensation; that which can be drawn or compressed into a narrower compass.

This agent meets with resistance in the moveable, and not being in the utmost extremity of density, but condensable yet further, every assistance works something upon the mover to condense it. Digby on the Soul.

To CONDENSATE. v. a. [from condensare, Latin.] To condense; to make thicker.

To CONDENSATE. v. n. To grow thicker.

CONDENSATE. adj. [from condensatus, Latin.] Made thick; condensed; compressed into less space.

Water by nature is white; yea, thickened or condensed, most white, as it appeareth by the hail and snow. Peacbam.

CONDENSATION. n. f. [from condensare.] The act of thickening any body, or making it more gross and weighty. Opposite to rarefaction.

If by natural arguments it may be proved, that water, by condensation, may become earth; the same reason teacheth, that earth, rarefied, may become water. Raleigh's History.

By water-glasses the account was not regular; for, from attenuation and condensation, the hours were shorter in hot weather than in cold. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The supply of its moisture is by rains and snow, and dews and condensation of vapours, and perhaps by subterraneous passages. Bentley.

To CONDENSE. v. a. [from condensare, Latin.] To make any body more thick, close, and weighty; to drive or attract the parts of any body nearer to each other. To inspissate; opposed to rarefy.

Moving in so high a sphere, he must needs, as the sun, raise many envious exhalations; which condensed by a popular odium, were capable to cloud the brightest merit. King Charles.

Some lead their youth abroad, while some condense

Their liquid store, and some in cells dispenfe. Dryden's Virgil.

Such dense and solid strata arrest the vapour, at the surface of the earth, and collect and condense it there. Woodward.

To CONDENSE. v. n. To grow close and weighty; to withdraw its parts into a narrow compass.

The water falling from the upper parts of the cave, does presently there condense into little stones. Boyle's Scrp. Obym.

All vapours, when they begin to condense and coalesce into small parcels, become first of that bigness whereby azure must be reflected, before they can constitute other colours. Newton's Opticks.

Blood hath bought blood, and blows have answered blows,

Strength match'd with strength, and power confronted power.

Bellona's bridegroom, lapt in proof
Confronted him with self comparisons,

Point against point rebellious, arm 'gainst arm.

3. To oppose one evidence to another in open court.

We began to lay his unkindness unto him: he seeing himself confronted by so many, went not to denial, but to justify his cruel falsehood.

4. To compare one thing with another.

When I confront a medal with a verse, I only shew you the same design executed by different hands.

CONFRONTA'TION. n. f. [French.] The act of bringing two evidences face to face.

TO CONFUSE. v. a. [confusus, Latin.]

1. To disorder; to disperse irregularly.

Thus roving on
In confus'd march forlorn, th' advent'rous bands
View'd first their lamentable lot, and found No rest.

2. To mix, not separate.

At length an universal hubbub wild,
Of stunning founds and voices all confus'd,
Borne through the hollow dark, assaults his ear.

3. To perplex, not distinguish; to obscure.

We may have a clear and distinct idea of the existence of many things, though our ideas of their intimate essences and causes are very confused and obscure.

4. to hurry the mind.

Confus'd and sadly she at length replies.

CONFUS'EDLY. adv. [from confused.]

1. In a mixed mass; without separation.

These four nations are every where mixt in the Scriptures, because they dwelt confusedly together.

2. Indistinctly; one mingled with another.

Th' inner court with horror, noise and tears,
Confus'dly fill'd; the women's shrieks and cries
The arch'd vaults re-echo.

On mount Vesuvius next he fix'd his eyes,
And saw the smoking tops confus'dly rise;

A hideous ruin!

I viewed through a prism, and saw them most confusedly defined, so that I could not distinguish their smaller parts from one another.

Heroes and heroines shout confus'dly rise;
And base and treble voices strike the skies.

3. Not clearly; not plainly.

He confusedly and obscurely delivered his opinion.

4. Tumultuously; hastily; not deliberately; not exactly.

The propriety of thoughts and words, which are the hidden beauties of a play, are but confusedly judged in the vehemence of action.

CONFUS'EDNESS. n. f. [from confused.] Want of distinctness; want of clearness.

Hitherto these titles of honour carry a kind of confusedness, and rather betokened a successive office than an established dignity.

The cause of the confusedness of our notions, next to natural inability, is want of attention.

CONFUSION. n. f. [from confuse.]

1. Irregular mixture; tumultuous medley.

God, only wife, to punish pride of wit,
Among men's wits hath this confusion wrought;

As the proud tow'r, whose points the clouds
did hit,

By tongues confusion was to ruin brought.

2. Tumult; disorder.

God is not a God of sedition and confusion, but of order and of peace. Hooker, Preface.

This is a happier and more comely time,

Than when these fellows ran about the streets,
Crying confusion. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

3. Indistinct combination.

The confusion of two different ideas, which a customary connexion of them in their minds hath made to them almost one, fills their heads with false views, and their reasonings with false consequences. Locke.

4. Overthrow; destruction.

The strength of their illusion,

Shall draw him in to his confusion. Shakespeare.
